Enemy Atrocities in Hue Discovered

SAIGON — Enemy troops executed more than 1,000 persons, burying some alive and shooting or beheading others while they occupied Hue in February, the U.S. Embassy reported yesterday.

Most of the victims were South Vietnamese, but they also included two French priests, three South Koreans and a Hong Kong Chinese who was a British subject, the embassy said.

There have been piecemeal reports of the slaughter of civilians while the North Vietnamese and Viet Cong occupied the old imperial capital during the Tet offensive, but this was the first time any officials gave an over-all picture.

An embassy spokesman said it took two months to compile the reports from allied sources and South Vietnamese police because officials wanted to be sure of accuracy.

"Many had been shot, some beheaded," said the embassy report. "A number of bodies showed signs of mutilation. Most were found with hands bound behind their backs."

Allies Squeeze V.C. in A Shau Valley

SAIGON — South Vietnamese troops have swept into the southern part of A Shau Valley as U.S. air cavalrymen fight down from the north, tightening the squeeze on that North Vietnamese stronghold, U.S. officers reported yesterday.

Slightly lifting security wraps on the operation that opened April 19, officers in Da Nang on the coast 50 miles east of the valley said the South Vietnamese ran into light resistance on entering Monday.

Troops of the U.S. 1st Air Cavalry Division reported little opposition in the first three days of the operation, but security has prevented any report on their progress since.

The lack of resistance indicated that the main North Vietnamese force has not yet been encountered or that it pulled out into nearby Laos in the past few weeks of relentless bombing by the eight-engine B52s of the Strategic Air Command.

Informed sources said that for the past two days, the Stratofortresses have been pounding suspected troop concentrations in Laos just to the west of the A Shau Valley.

Elderly Heart Transplant Patient Dies

PARIS — A 66-year-old French grandfather, the oldest man to undergo a heart transplant, died yesterday 5 1/2 hours after he received a new heart. The doctors who grafted it said the patient's age had been a major problem.

Clovis Roblain, a retired truck driver called "Pop" by his friends, succumbed to an insufficient flow of blood to the brain, never regaining consciousness after a nine-hour operation Saturday night, doctors at La Pitié Hospital said. They had given Roblain, who suffered a cardiac attack last year, the heart of Michel Gypsz, a 23-year-old metal worker who died of brain injuries Friday from an auto collision.

Dr. Maurice Mercadier, who headed a 10-man surgical team, said "we must have a patient sufficiently resistant to have a chance of success" in operations the team plans to perform in the future.

Poor People's Campaign Continues

WASHINGTON — Representatives of the Poor People's Campaign calling on some of the most powerful men in government continued to get red carpet treatment yesterday but their leader insisted: "We don't just want sympathy, we want action."

Taking stock on the campaign's second day, the Rev. Ralph Abernathy assured his followers that polite receptions and declarations of good intentions won't sway him. The plan is still to bring thousands of poor persons to Washington, he said, to camp here and apply mounting pressure to the governmental apparatus until the lot of America's poor improves dramatically.

Abernathy said after a round of conferences, "We made it clear we intend to conduct nonviolent, peaceful demonstrations. We also made it very clear to them that we are leaders of a revolution that is taking place in this country today."

LBJ Urges World Money Approval

WASHINGTON — President Johnson launched a drive yesterday for a quick U.S. ratification of a plan for paper gold — the first basic change in international currency in more than two decades.

In a special message to Congress, Johnson said the United States, as a leader in the five years of negotiations which led to the plan, should be one of the first nations to ratify it.

He called the plan a landmark and a historic step and said failure to approve it "could turn the clock backwards to the dark days of restrictive economic policies, narrow interests, empty ports and idle men."

If ratified by 65 nations with an 80 per cent weighted vote in the International Monetary Fund the agreement will represent the first basic change in IMF operations since the Fund was established by the Bretton Woods conference of 1944.

The new money would take the form of a bookkeeping entry on government and IMF books and would be called officially a Special Drawing Right, or SDR in the Fund. Individual citizens would never see it.

Shafer, Nixon Hail Rocky's Decision

HARRISBURG — Gov. Shafer said yesterday Nelson Rockefeller's decision to campaign for the Republican presidential nomination "can't help but help the Republican Party and the nation."

"This is going to be an exciting year," Shafer said. "We will have all the issues discussed in full."

Standing at his side as he welcomed Rockefeller into the race was former Vice President Richard Nixon, regarded as the front runner for the GOP nomination.

Nixon had scheduled a luncheon meeting with Shafer to discuss Republican unity prior to Rockefeller's announcement from Albany, N.Y.

Nixon said he believed Gov. Nelson Rockefeller's entry into the Republican presidential race would benefit the country by providing a healthy debate on the issues of the day.

However, Nixon said he still was confident he would win the GOP nomination.

Shafer said Rockefeller's decision confirmed the wisdom of taking an uncommitted 64-member Pennsylvania delegation to the GOP National Convention next August in Miami, Fla.

"Events can change very swiftly," Shafer said. "I don't know what will happen in the future. But at the moment, there is no change in my plans to be a favorite son."

Shafer is scheduled to attend a luncheon meeting of the World Affairs Council in Philadelphia today at which time Rockefeller is expected to deliver a major address on Vietnam.

Columbia: No Easy Answers

Editor's Note: Healy, a graduate student in journalism at Columbia, did his undergraduate work at Penn State, where he was co-sports editor of The Daily Collegian.

By BRIAN HEALY

Special to The Daily Collegian

NEW YORK CITY, April 30—The campus of Columbia University was quiet and somewhat peaceful late this afternoon, following a series of protests and demonstrations earlier in the day by more than 3,000 students.

Rain began to fall around 6 p.m. and police and university officials hope it will have a calming effect upon the very angry campus.

However, it is doubtful that any immediate solution will be reached in the next few days, after the violence of this morning.

More Columbia news on page three

The Tactical Police Force first began to appear in increasing numbers about 12:15 a.m. A crowd of more than 500 students that had circled the Low Memorial Library, the Columbia administrative building, for most of the night dwindled to less than 200.

The Majority Coalition opposed to the tactics though not the aims of the sit-in demonstrations, still rung the outside of President Grayson Kirk's office, where more than 50 demonstrators sat, talked, ate or tried to sleep.

Vigil Over

Suddenly at 2 p.m. the Coalition—which had vowed to stay until the strikers left the building—ended its vigil.

More policemen arrived at the campus gates on Broadway and Amsterdam avenues, swelling their ranks to more than 1,000. Four fire engines were parked one block away in front of the Cathedral of Saint Joan the Devine. The administration had been silent for more than eight hours.

It was time for the "bust." The violence that followed, as the students were forcibly evicted from the buildings by the police, has been described widely in the press. It is doubtful whether anything else could have been expected from the police, who had been taunted and ridiculed for five days, and students who were resolutely convinced of the justice of their cause and foolish enough to think they could beat off the police.

Today students are on strike and banned from entering their own campus. The school's faculty has asked that the day be one of meditation and reconciliation for students, faculty and administration.

But the issues which caused the six-day crisis have not been solved. There are two issues which must be dealt with before peace can be restored to Morningside Heights. They are questions of student power and black power.

SDS and Student Power

The Students for a Democratic Society, which sponsored the protest, decided last summer that 1968 would be a year dedicated to student power. The Columbia experience affirms this.

It was not the building of Columbia's new gym in a Harlem park which raised their ire. It was not the University's association with the Institute for Defense Analyses, a Defense Department branch specializing in weapons research.

The students are angry simply because they have no say in the running of the University. The gym and IDA would not have been issues, many argued, if the students and faculty, not the administration, established Columbia's policies. For the issues, in that case, would not have existed.

Students' desire for amnesty confirms this. Columbia has stopped the construction of the gym at Mayor Lindsay's request and the political roadblocks and public pressure which now oppose it make it doubtful that it will ever be built.

The IDA has been the victim of general feeling at most universities against secret government agencies. The recent controversy has made IDA activities public, creating widespread resentment. It will be no surprise if these relations are soon severed.

Not Satisfied

However, in the end, the students were still not satisfied, because they did not feel they deserved punishment for using admittedly illegal means to end what they considered an immoral policy. The students who held the buildings were asking the university to make student power legitimate and the SDS is now calling for a strike to achieve that end.

The second issue, however, is much more complex and is one facing the entire urban community of the nation. It is the question of what should be the policy of an elite white private university with its more than 1,500,000 black neighbors in Harlem.

The demonstrators who occupied Hamilton Hall were all Negroes. The police were expected to evict all students occupying buildings last Thursday. However, Kirk was initially advised against using police force due to fear of reprisal from the Harlem community.

Harlem did not oppose the gym when it was first proposed in 1961. The section of the park in which it was to be built is trash strewn and rock-covered. The park itself is a refuge for thieves, muggers and assorted other deviants, which makes it unsafe after dusk. The gym undoubtedly would have given the community athletic community facilities vastly superior to any it has now.

No More Charity

But the black community no longer wants charity. Negroes want recognition as equals from a white university which figuratively and literally looks down upon them from the cliffs of Morningside Heights. They view the gym as an attempt by Whitey to push himself into the black community and steal black land.

However, the problem goes much deeper than the gym. The university has repeatedly refused to allow its laborers to unionize. Many of the workers are from Harlem.

Columbia is also in the midst of an expansion program, buying up hundreds of homes in the campus area. Many of these homes are occupied by blacks who are forced to move. This has caused increasing tension between the campus and the black community.

Monday night 350 Harlem residents demonstrated in front of the campus against what their leaders termed racist policies. They have promised to return.

Wednesday, hundreds of white students will demonstrate at this university. They also have promised to return.

Fox Discounts Possibility Of Tuition Hike This Year

By DENNIS STIMELING
Collegian USG Reporter

"There will not be a tuition increase next year," Jon Fox, acting Undergraduate Student Government president said last night. He added that University students will probably not see such a program enacted next year "because this is an election year, and the legislators running for re-election do not want to alienate the students and parents who must re-elect them."

Fox, in a WDFM press conference, said the 1968-1970 academic year is the one for concern. He added that USG is attempting to form a full time lobby in Harrisburg to fight a tuition increase.

Fox said, "The Board of Trustees has its own lobby in Harrisburg. Why shouldn't we? The only way to get student opinion known in the state capital is through our own organization and that is what we're trying to establish."

Fox added that a legislative lobby through the Pennsylvania Association of College Students is being examined for possible implementation.

A student opinion telephone poll for the Senate Committee on Resident Instruction will be conducted today and tomorrow, according to Fox. The poll, to reach 10 per cent of the student body, will "examine students' opinions as to a pass-fail grading system for compulsory physical education courses."

The students will be asked to approve or disapprove of a compulsory pass-fail system or the option of pass-fail and regular grading system. The latter proposal is similar to that being instituted fall term for elective academic subjects.

Fox predicted that coeds would desire a compulsory system of pass-fail while male students would choose the optional program "because most men do well in physical education and it helps to pull up their average."

On the problem of women students being allowed to live downtown, Fox said, "It's basically a problem of economics for the University." Fox said that a USG poll has revealed that at least 250 coeds would live downtown if given the opportunity.

Fox said in an interview with Charles Lewis, vice president for student affairs, that this topic had been discussed. According to Fox, the University cannot enroll any more students. Thus 250 women moving downtown would essentially "be vacating an entire dormitory."

Since this would be economically unfeasible for the University, Fox said "Some people have proposed leveling Nittany and moving those students into the vacated dormitory."

According to Fox, this would probably be rejected by the University because Nittany provides "the students necessary to fill vacancies which occur in other residence halls." Another solution discussed with Dr. Lewis was requiring sophomore men to live in residence halls. Fox rejected this plan because "this would not solve one problem and would create another."

Fox added, "We have substantiated the

Women Should Avoid Walking Alone

Coeds Receive Warning

University security personnel have issued a warning to women students to avoid walking alone on campus at night.

The precaution to walk only in pairs or groups was given by the Department of Security because of recent minor incidents.

Robert H. Barnes, security specialist at the University, said the warning was given in a preventative manner. "It's a constant thing with us in regard to our young women," he explained. "We want our girls to be safe at all times."

"We always urge students to do this (walk in groups) especially during Spring Term when there tends to be more incidents of attacks, molesting and things like that," Lorraine O'Hara, Assistant Dean of Women, said. "There tends to be a rise of incidents of this type of thing in the spring, and this spring is no exception," she added. "It is a thing that we take seriously and hope the women students will too for their own protection."

Woodrow Bierly of the Public Information department described the warning as "a year-by-year precaution taken at this time for women students. It's spring and students are out all over campus," he added.

Rockefeller Gets Into GOP Race

ALBANY, N.Y. (AP) — Gov. Nelson A. Rockefeller, reversing his previous position, threw himself into contention yesterday for the Republican Presidential nomination and vowed to fight Richard M. Nixon "right up to the last vote."

"I now commit myself to seeking this office and to serve our nation—with all my heart and mind and will," he said.

Rockefeller's expression ranged from jut-jawed determination to breezy optimism as he made his announcement and then replied to questions in a news conference.

Just a few days ago, in another news conference, the New York governor took himself out of the race for the nomination. A number of the men who persuaded him to change his mind were present yesterday.

Changed Country

In a conversation at his official residence later, Rockefeller said to a reporter, "The country has changed. Never in history has so much changed in five weeks. Now I am giving the people an option."

In a statement which he read before the questioning began, he set forth four reasons for reversing himself:

(1) "... the gravity of the crisis that face us as a people," (2) His conviction that "to comment from the sidelines is not an effective way to present the alternatives,"

(3) He said many persons, "within the Republican party and outside it," urged him to get in the fight.

(4) "Personally, I am deeply disturbed by the course of events — growing unrest and anxiety at home, and the signs of disintegration abroad."

Nixon Speaks Out

Comments promptly came from Nixon, the apparent front runner for the GOP nomination, and from Gov. George Romney of Michigan, whom Rockefeller supported until he dropped out of the race in early March.

Nixon's statement said in part, "I think Gov. Rockefeller's announcement will make for a more exciting convention and will result in a more meaningful discussion of the issues. I'm glad to have him in. I have thought all along that it would be very helpful for the Republican party to have another active candidate in the contest."

Romney echoed it is thought, adding: "Because no other candidate in either party can match his executive experience in national and state government, every American should give his availability for the President the same careful consideration that the Michigan delegation will in determining which candidate it will finally support at the convention in Miami Beach."

On March 21, when Rockefeller said he would not contend for the nomination, he said he would answer "any true and meaningful call from his party."

Asked if he now has heard that call, he reported, "I think the draft is ready—I would say it has been the result of events."

His supporters said this refers primarily to President Johnson's announcement that he would not seek re-election.

At another point, Rockefeller said he has been edging toward his decision to run over the past 10 days or so.

He said: "... after discussions with so many of those who are present in this room, Sen. Thurston Morton and Mr. William E. Miller, who only this weekend came back from an extensive trip in which they felt and expressed to me their deep conviction that this was the right course of action, I felt that this was in the interests of the party and that it was the desire of the people."

The news conference, which was nationally televised, sounded at times like a combination of a victory celebration and a national nominating convention.

The Red Room in the state capitol was jam-packed and so were the corridors outside. There were about 100 newsmen and perhaps double that many spectators and supporters of the governor in the room.

He was interrupted several

Murphy Speaks Out On Probation Question

By PAT GUROSKY
Collegian Administration Reporter

The current system of academic probation, which prohibits students on probation from participating in extra-curricular activities, is "a rule out of the past which has lost its effectiveness," according to Raymond Murphy, coordinator of men's activities.

Murphy said yesterday he has known of student leaders who regained their academic status by studying hard during the term they were on probation, but that the University cannot suppose this would happen in every case. A very small minority of students in leadership positions suffer because of the probation restriction, he said.

The Academics, Athletics, and Admissions Standards Committee of the University Senate will submit a bill Tuesday to the Senate advocating major revisions in probation rules.

The new plan would put no restriction on activities during the probation period and the system would be based on grade point deficiency rather than on the present drop-level average. A grade point deficiency would exist when the total number of grade points earned by a student is less than the total number of credits earned multiplied by two.

Students would be permitted a certain deficiency according to their term standing before they would be dropped by the University.

Murphy said he is convinced the proposed plan has definite advantages over the present system.

"Students now get into the situation when their averages are so low it is statistically impossible to regain a 2.00 by the time they graduate. It is in the student's best interest if he is dropped before this situation occurs," Murphy said.

"Drop action will be taken more frequently by the University in the future," he added.

Murphy called the AAAS Committee plan "a good piece of legislation." Coupled with the pass-fail program, the University is "moving into an era of new kinds of appropriate academic regulation," he said. J. D. Ashby, chairman of the Senate sub-committee which formed the proposal, said yesterday that it will be "a constructive improvement to eliminate the restrictive view of academic probation."

Ashby said that students often work under a feeling of "false security" about their grades. "A freshman who has a 1.4 cumulative average and thinks he is doing all right doesn't realize that he will have to maintain a 2.6 throughout his sophomore year to pull his average up to a 2.00," he said.

The members of the AAAS Committee are: Ashby, director of the Division of Counseling; Galen Godbey, student representative; T. Sherman Stanford, director of admissions; Donald Josephson, department head of dairy science; David McKinley, associate dean of business; Lawrence Perez, assistant dean of engineering; and Walter Walters, associate dean of arts and architecture.

Levine, Moshinsky Honored by Hearst

Collegian Editor Paul Levine and former Editorial Editor Julie Moshinsky were honored by the William Randolph Hearst Foundation in its March newspaper writing contest. Levine won a fourth place for his story, "Championship Wrestling Wall to Wall," an analysis of the National Collegiate Athletic Association tournament held March 20-22 in Rec Hall. For his full page story including photographs, Levine was awarded a $300 scholarship. The University's School of Journalism received a matching grant Levine's story, written when he was sports editor, appeared in Collegian, March 29.

Miss Moshinsky, who graduated Winter Term, was awarded a foundation scroll for her story of Puerto Ricans in suburban Philadelphia. The story appeared in "The Evening and Sunday Bulletin" of Philadelphia. Now employed full-time at the Bulletin, Miss Moshinsky served four years on Collegian staff. She was a staff writer and news editor before becoming editorial editor her senior year.

Paul R. Levine, a University of Florida junior, won the first place award in the March competition for his story of the plight of a Negro woman and her six children. His award enabled the University of Florida to win the overall writing award competition for 1967-68.

On Probation?

While the issue of academic probation might not be of major student interest, it is worth the attention that the University has decided to give it.

As the more than 2,600 University students, including those at Commonwealth Campuses, will agree, "pro" is to be avoided. Their Winter Term averages fell below 1.7, and now they are prohibited from taking part in extracurricular activities.

Some students could not care less about being able to participate in campus organizations. For others, however, the probation penalty denies valuable educational experiences found outside the classroom.

But the Senate Committee on Academic, Athletic and Admission Standards announced Monday that it has formulated a plan for doing away with academic probation. The plan will be presented to the Senate at its meeting next Tuesday.

Basically, the committee has called for the elimination of academic probation. The reasoning is that students on probation spend no more time studying than they would if they were permitted to participate in activities.

As a replacement, the committee proposes a system based on "grade point deficiency." A deficiency would exist when a student's grade point total is less than his credit total multiplied by two.

Under this system, if a student's deficiency total exceeds the limit established for his term level, that student will be invited to end his studies in the Happy Valley.

The Senate committee's suggestion sounds more reasonable and more practical than the present concept of probation.

It is more reasonable because probation is not a fair way to punish academic deficiencies. For instance, a student who usually earns Dean's List grades, if he has one poor term, is unjustly prevented from working in campus organizations.

And what explanation can be offered for preventing a student from playing intramural football just because he has not reached an arbitrarily set academic level?

The committee proposal is more practical because the present probation system often is not enforced. Frequently, probation regulations are disregarded in the case of student leaders.

We therefore urge the Senate to vote favorably on the plan that is presented to it next week. The Undergraduate Student Government and faculty members should make their approval known to Senate members. —W.E.

'Hot Line' Is Coming

"Hot Line," a new feature of The Daily Collegian, will begin next week.

The "Hot Line" is intended as a public service feature which will allow the dissatisfied to air complaints and attempt to answer them. Students and faculty are invited to participate in the "Hot Line." Grievances about classes, dormitory or downtown living, or anything for which an answer is sought, may be phoned into the "Hot Line."

Want to know why you've had goulash three days in a row in the dining hall? Call Collegian "Hot Line." Maybe there is a good reason for the plethora of noodles. If not, an unsatisfactory answer for all to see might be the best way to end the indigestion.

"Hot Line" calls will be received every Monday and Wednesday evening from 8 to 11 beginning next week. The special Collegian "Hot Line" number is 865-2881. The answers to Monday night's calls will be printed in the Collegian on Wednesday, and Wednesday's calls will appear Friday.

Fine Interpretation of Lawrence

TO THE EDITOR: A young critic such as Paul Seydor should know that a work of art is primarily to be elucidated and not evaluated. If absolute impersonality, in the lines of new criticism, is not possible, a critic should at least try not to pass a completely wrong interpretation, and this is exactly what Paul Seydor did in his critique of "The Fox."

To say that killing Jill is "an unbelievably-God-awfully stupid scene" is to accuse D. H. Lawrence for having had the views and attitudes towards life that he adhered to very strongly. It is, moreover, to blame Koch, Carlino and Rydell for their very successful presentation of Lawrence's novella on the screen. Cold and snow, and particularly death in the snow is a characteristic and recurrent symbolic image in many of Lawrence's works.

One only needs to remember Gerald's death in "Women in Love." Jill is the embodiment of the negation of life, a destroyer, a cold "thinker" Hermine in "Women in Love" who was bound to die if March and Paul had to establish a harmonious relationship. Paul's virility was not destructive and in the mentioned scene he does not appear as "the male-destroyer" but as a savior.

Lawrence surely never intended March to choose between the two. She only went through a period of inner conflict and nightmare. So does Ursula in "The Rainbow," but knowing Lawrence's main credo which is that the most valued and valuable relationship can only be achieved between man and woman, we know in advance that March has no choice.

Rydell has given us a fine, truly Lawrencian interpretation of "The Fox." To call this "artistic pussyfooting" and say that "audiences have a right to demand an intelligent resolution" only shows the ignorance of the critic who would easily sell Lawrence for a cheap melodrama.

Those who have not seen the film I would strongly advise not "to ignore it."

Dunja Jutronic, Graduate

Film Critique

Hari-Kari Cum Russian Roulette in 'Madigan'

By PAUL SEYDOR
Collegian Movie Critic

"Elvira Madigan," in its last two days at the Nittany Theater, is a shoo-in for the kitsch award of the year. Indeed, you would have to go all the way back to "The Sound of Music" to find a more gushing and meretricious film.

Certainly the story is as absurd. Now I ask you: in the unlikely event, men, that you deserted the army and your wife and children to run off with a former tightrope walker, and were subsequently pursued by the police—what would you do?

Waste what little money you have staying at a hotel, or use the cash to skip the country or even the continent? Would you try to get odd jobs under an assumed name so you could feed yourself and your lover? Probably.

Not Elvira and Sixten, boy. They starve. And to end their misery they commit a kind of hari-kari cum Russian Roulette, which inspires one critic to write that their love is what destroys them. Like hell. What destroys them is their own lack of common sense and ambition, qualities lovers presumably aren't supposed to have.

One gets the impression the film is geared to the drop-out faction, who can see reaffirmed on the screen their assertions about the crass and impersonal establishment.

"Well, okay, so the story isn't much," one might say. "At least you must admit the technical quality is good."

Alas, no. For sheer pristine beauty, not one frame even approaches the stunning photography of, say, "The Fox," or "Far From the Madding Crowd." The color is faded (suggesting perhaps the waning lives of the lovers), rather like an old madras shirt that has gone through the wash too many times.

What's more, there isn't a cinematic cliché to picture the wistful romanticism of young lovers that Director Bo Widerberg fails to use: blurred shots, stop-action, slow motion, filters, silhouettes against a setting sun. And because scene after repetitive scene drags out about twice too long, the film is enough to bore the pantalettes off a spinsterish school teacher.

Yet amidst the banality there is one saving grace: the melody from the slow movement of Mozart's 21st piano concerto serves as the theme song. The interpretation is none too stylistic, but Mozart is still Mozart, and anything which furthers his cause can't be all bad. Now if David Lean and Claude Lelouch would only discover Bach, Beethoven, and... Mahler?

Second Look at 'The Fox'

After doing some homework this past weekend by reading D. H. Lawrence's "The Fox," I discovered that the book ends like the film—with Jill's death caused by a falling tree. Yet Lawrence makes it work, because his emphases, his entire dramatic situation, and his characters are different from the film's. It's curious that the filmmakers, after altering Lawrence's novella so much, kept the ending, which is incongruous with their changes.

A Lawrence buff I know insists that I missed the point of Lawrence in Friday's critique. She maintains that Paul and March are motivated by instinctive, natural forces. Logic and choice play no part in their relationship.

Admittedly, the scriptwriters flirt with this in the scene where Paul explains to March why she can't kill the fox. Yet the scene doesn't come off convincingly, partly because of Keir Dullea's limited emotional projection, partly because the dialogue is taken from Lawrence's prose—a transformation that rarely works.

If the viewpoint is valid, the film's ending remains inadequate nevertheless. If the story shows the victory of the visceral over the cerebral, then March must part permanently with Jill while the latter is still alive. Otherwise, the point is not only vague and unresolved, but without impact.

I regret that the tone of Friday's critique of this film is so unfavorable. It was written in rage and utter disappointment with the filmmakers' seeming lack of respect for their own fine efforts. Let me amend my recommendations: I urge you to see "The Fox" now at Cinema 1, simply because a hundred of its hundred and ten minutes contains some of the finest sustained excellence you're likely to encounter in any film this year.

Drexel Wins Contest Prize

The College of Business Administration sponsored the Sixth Annual Business Simulation Competition last weekend. This year's participants were Drexel Institute of Technology, Clarion State College, Indiana University, Shippensburg State College, Duquesne University and Lehigh University. This year's winner was Drexel.

Business simulation is used throughout the country as a means of imitating, with the use of computers, an environment in which business decisions are made.

Paul S. Greenlaw, and Frederick K. Kniffin, professor of management, have written a popular business simulation entitled "Marksim: A Marketing Decision Simulation."

This simulation is used in the basic marketing courses here, and it is the basis of the College of Business Administration Student Council's annual business simulation competition.

The University's Business Student Council pioneered in the inter-collegiate business simulation competitions. Previous simulation winners are Temple University (1963), Indiana University of Pennsylvania (1964 and 1966), Bucknell University (1965), and Shippensburg State College (1967).

This year's activities began Friday evening with a briefing session on "Marksim," conducted by Greenlaw. The teams began their simulated decision-making Saturday morning.

Student directors for this year's competition were James Fehr (6th-accounting-Elizabeth-town), Philip Jones (6th-management-Greenwich, Conn.) and Jere Keefe (9th-accounting-Mercersburg). The competition lasted all day.

The faculty advisors from the participating colleges conducted an evaluation session after the competition was finished. Drexel, the winning team, was presented a silver bowl at a banquet held in the Hetzel Union Building Saturday evening.

Cwens honors freshman women who have excelled in scholarship and leadership at the University. As a hat society, Cwens serves the University through activities including an annual ginsuit sale for freshman women, ushering at Artist and Lecture Series and forming honor lines at football games.

PSU To Conduct 1968 Field School

The Department of Anthropology will conduct its 1968 field school at the site of a Susquehannock Indian Village in southeastern Pennsylvania.

The site, which dates from approximately 1575 and covers 20 acres, is located five miles from Millersville State College in Lancaster County. Students and staff participating in the field school will be housed in the college dormitories.

All students currently attending an accredited college or university are eligible for the field school. There are no course prerequisites. Undergraduate students will receive six credits of Anthropology 13 and graduate students will receive six credits of Anthropology 561. Students will receive training in such field techniques as photography, scientific excavation and map making as well as in laboratory techniques such as preservation and analysis.

Interested students should contact Joseph W. Michels, director of the Field School, or Samuel E. Casselberry, field director of the 1968 field school, at the Department of Archaeology, Walnut Building. Enrollment in the field school is limited.

Police Break Up Columbia Sit-in

NEW YORK (AP) — New York City police stormed five occupied Columbia University buildings in the dead of night yesterday and broke up a week-long student sit-in, which had paralyzed the Ivy League campus.

"We anticipate a full schedule of classes today," a university spokesman announced.

However, even as he spoke, undergraduate militants sought to promote an all-out strike of students and faculty. Their target was Columbia President Grayson Kirk, who called in the police to smash the disruptive demonstration.

Groups roamed the littered uptown Manhattan campus, shouting, "Kirk must go! Kirk must go!"

Will Not Resign

Kirk said he had no intention of resigning.

In the club-swinging, fist-fighting, pushing and kneeling that marked the violent subjugation of the Columbia demonstrators, 100 youths and 15 policemen were reported injured, none seriously. There were 628 arrests, on charges of trespassing.

The early morning assault against the barricaded and occupied buildings turned the once-placid Morningside Heights campus into a dark and seething uproar of students, who bled, wept, screamed and denounced police as "fascists."

There were complaints of police brutality against the 600 to 700 students whose sit-ins began April 23. Columbia has an enrollment of 25,381.

'Times' Reporter Beaten

New York Times reporter Bob Thomas said he had been severely beaten by police, and added: "I observed some really savage beatings given to students."

David B. Truman, the university's vice president, conceded the occupied buildings could not be retaken "without some roughing up."

However, City Human Rights Commissioner William H. Booth watched the removal of about 100 Negro demonstrators from Hamilton Hall and said he saw no police brutality. Most of the Negroes walked out as directed, their hands in the air.

Police Commissioner Howard R. Leary

congratulated his policemen on "an excellent job." However, Mayor John V. Lindsay asked Leary for a report on the brutality charges.

Lindsay said in a statement: "Regardless of the merits of their cause, a few hundred students cannot be allowed to impose their will on a university of some 20,000 students through destructive, illegal tactics."

"Only after a remarkable display of patience and restraint did the university file criminal charges of trespass and formally request the New York City police to remove the students who had taken over school buildings. Once the charges were filed, the police had no choice under the law but to arrest and remove the trespassing students."

Kirk's office in the Low Memorial Library had been occupied since the beginning of the demonstration. Students left it with cigarette-charred rugs, overturned desks and chairs and a litter of blankets and half-consumed fruit.

In other occupied buildings, furniture was overturned or broken and empty whiskey and wine bottles left behind. In Mathematics Hall, someone had painted on the walls: "Lenin Won! Fidel Won! We Will Win!"

Negroes, Whites Protest

The demonstrations were sponsored by white Students for a Democratic Society and black Students for an Afro-American Society.

The Negroes, backed by the white group, protested construction of an $11.5-million university gymnasium on 2.1 acres of Morningside Park, a public area which separates Columbia from Harlem. They joined neighborhood activists in contending the gym deprived the Harlem community of a needed part of the 30-acre park.

The white students also called upon Columbia to sever ties with the Institute for Defense Analysis, a research group which they said was furthering the war in Vietnam.

Midway in the demonstration, as its crippling effects spread, the university agreed to a temporary suspension of the gym project. The demonstrators then demanded total amnesty as their price for ending the sitality. Kirk already was committed to disciplinary action against them for violating college regulations.

No More 'Sleeping Giants'

MRC To Change 'Image'

The outgoing president of the Men's Residence Council said last night that MRC's "sleeping giant" image will be altered in the future.

William Sinclair said that MRC will become a strong and influential representative body. He also said that MRC has accomplished many goals, but there is much to be done in upcoming years.

MRC is now studying a plan to permit individuals to have private television sets in their residence hall rooms, Sinclair said. If the plan is approved, the television sets will have to be 14 inches or less and will have to be equipped with ear antennas and possibly ear phones. A decision will be made later this week.

Also discussed was a proposal to present Outstanding Living Area awards to recognize achievement in three categories — intramural, scholastics and community service — rather than include all three in one over-all award as in the past.

Otto Mueller, Director of Housing and Food Services, was appointed co-advisor to the MRC. George Hubbard was appointed chief justice to the undergraduate Student Government Supreme Court and James Szafran was given the post of orientation chairman. Also mentioned at the meeting was a tentative plan for a joint Association of Women Students — Men's Residence Council newsletter.

Gene Cavallucci, new president of MRC, presented a USG report in which he described plans for the Spring Arts Festival. The borough has agreed to close off a street in order to accommodate the gallery-type exhibit.

Faculty Wins Honors, Goes to Conferences

Five University faculty members are on the program for the annual meeting of the Pennsylvania Home Economics Association tomorrow and Friday in Pittsburgh. Louise Gentry, a member of President Johnson's Consumer Advisory Council, will report on the work of the Council. She is assistant dean for resident education, College of Human Development.

Jeanette Lynch, assistant professor of family economics, and Helen E. Bell, associate professor of home management extension, will speak on "Consumer Credit - What's Our Role?"

Among the speakers on "Art in the Home and Environment" will be Miriam McGrew, associate professor of home management extension, and David B. VanDommelen, associate professor of family housing and home art.

Writes Management Text
"Manufacturing Management: A Quantitative Approach" by Robert A. Olsen, associate professor of industrial engineering, has been published by the International Textbook Company of Scranton. Written from a practicing management's standpoint, the text considers the use of numerical logic to solve management problems.

New Machine on Campus
F. F. Aplan, professor and head of the Department of Mineral Preparation, has announced the presentation to his department of an Erickson laboratory heavy-made separator by the Mining and Metals Division, Union Carbide Corporation.

This device will allow heavy media separation tests to be made on smaller samples more conveniently than is possible with the pilot plant equipment presently available.

AAUP Chapter Names President
Robert K. Murray, professor of American history and head of the Department of History, has been named president of the University Chapter of the American Association of University Professors.

Goodwin Elected Vice President

H. Eugene Goodwin, director of the School of Journalism, has been elected vice president of the American Council on Education for Journalism, in New York City early this week. The organization is the formal recognized agency for the accreditation of college journalism programs.

Goodwin is one of two representatives of the American Association of Schools and Departments of Journalism. Membership in the 16-member council is drawn equally from the communications industry and the journalism education profession.

New Faculty Member Named
Joseph F. Erhart, a member of the department of speech has been appointed assistant professor of classics at the Beaver Campus of Penn State.

Erhart has had broad experience in teaching French, speech, philosophy and religious studies and has coached successful college debating teams.

Presents Paper at Conference
Aaron Lipton, associate professor of education in the department of elementary education, presented a research paper, "Teacher Rigidity in Relation to Progress of Retarded Readers," at the International Reading Association Conference Thursday in Boston. The paper will be published in Vol. 13 of the IRA Proceedings.

Lipton is also the author of two chapters of a new book, "Integrated Education," edited by M. Weinberg and published by Glencoe Press.

Lipton's contributions are entitled "Policies for Integrated Schools," and "Programs of Integrated Education."

Professor Gives Lecture

Erwin W. Mueller, research professor of physics, delivered a lecture on "Direct Observation of Atomic Lattice Defects in Metals" Friday at the EURATOM installation at Ispra in northern Italy.

Mueller made the talk at the invitation of EURATOM, the European Atomic Energy Community which pools the resources of France, Germany, Italy, Belgium, Netherlands and Luxembourg for the development of peaceful uses of atomic energy. This is Mueller's second lecture visit to Ispra since 1964.

Research on Laser

James L. Hunt, associate professor of physics at the University of Guelph, in Ontario, Canada, has been appointed visiting professor of physics at the University to serve from May 1, 1968, to April 1, 1969.

While at the University, he will be doing research in laser physics.

Appointed to Advisory Board
Forrest J. Remick, associate professor of nuclear engineering and assistant to the vice president for research has been appointed to an additional one-year term on the editorial advisory board of "Nuclear Application," a journal of the American Nuclear Society.

Remick has served on the Advisory Board since the beginning of the journal in 1964.

"Nuclear Applications" was established to fulfill the needs for a journal of the applied nuclear sciences, nuclear engineering and related technology.

Speaks on 'Man and Machine'

Benjamin W. Niebel, professor and head of the Department of Industrial Engineering, spoke to the Reading chapter of the American Institute of Industrial Engineers last week on the subject of "Man and Machine Relationships."

Niebel developed several models for determining the number of production facilities that should be assigned to an operator in order to optimize the cost per unit of production. The man-machine models included allowances for interference delays when random breakdown or work stoppages occurred.

Presents Paper on Kant

Hiram Caton, assistant professor of philosophy, presented a paper at the 66th annual meeting of the Western Division of the American Philosophical Association last week in St. Louis.

Caton's paper, "Kant's Replies to His Critics," was presented during a discussion on the philosophy of religion. It will be published in the Journal of Historical Philosophy.

Other members of the department of philosophy who attended the meeting are John M. Anderson, Carl R. Hausman, Robert G. Price and Carl Vaughn.

Rockefeller Enters GOP Race

There was laughter when Rockefeller said he had communicated his decision to Gov. Ronald Reagan of California, who is considered a potential candidate. When asked about Reagan's reaction, Rockefeller said, "He wished me the best of luck."

He was asked whether he thought he would get the support of the "conservatives" in the GOP. Rockefeller said: "I have the feeling that ideology is not as big a factor now as is the desire on the part of the party and the country to find unity and to find constructive action to meet the problems. I think there is more pragmatism in the feeling than before."

As Rockefeller spoke, Morton raised his hand in a broad gesture and pointed at Miller, sitting beside him. Miller was Sen. Barry Goldwater's running mate in the 1964 Presidential campaign.

To a question about the handling of recent civil disorders in Washington and other major cities, Rockefeller replied:

"I feel that on the whole this country, going through a very difficult situation, is handling the situation with wisdom, maturity and with a sense of the values for human dignity which is inherent in our Judeo-Christian heritage, and which is the essence of the concept of the Founding Fathers."

"And, while we have had disturbances, while we've got problems, I am personally optimistic that we are making more progress than is recognized."

"And we have the wisdom and the knowledge and the ability to correct the root causes of those problems and to deal with them effectively."

An explosion of applause followed this statement. Another outburst of clapping came when Rockefeller defended his recent statement urging expenditure of $150 billion over a period of 10 years for urban renewal.

AP News Analysis

Rocky, Reagan Union?

By JACK BELL
AP Political Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Gov. Nelson A. Rockefeller's entry into active competition for the GOP presidential nomination points toward a coalition of convenience with California Gov. Ronald Reagan.

The necessity of preventing former Vice President Richard M. Nixon from sweeping to a first ballot nomination at the Miami Beach, Fla., convention may force New York's Rockefeller and Reagan into a cagey embrace even though they are presumed to occupy opposing poles in Republican policy thinking.

Between them, Rockefeller and Reagan are expected to control the bulk of their states' 176 votes toward the 607 needed for the nomination.

Only by sticking together and attracting favorite sons to their coalition banner can they hope to force the multiple roll calls which could swing the nomination to one of them—or possibly to a dark horse.

Strong in the South
Reagan is strong in the South where Nixon's most compact strongholds and where Rockefeller could expect little more than a pleasant greeting from party workers.

Rockefeller is strong in New England and the eastern industrial states, where Reagan is not exactly popular. Reagan holds California and presumably has secondary strength in the Pacific coast and some of the mountain states.

The chief stumbling block to team action is that neither governor can admit publicly he is clubbing with the other to stop Nixon.

It would be politically unseemly, for example, for Rockefeller's backers to give public support to Reagan in the Nebraska and Oregon primaries, where the California governor is on the ballot against Nixon and the New York governor is not.

Rockefeller obviously is going to depend on Republican governors to back his bid for the nomination. But they are not easily herded in any single direction, as they have demonstrated repeatedly.

Chafee Support

Gov. John H. Chafee of Rhode Island, head of the Republican Governors' Association, has been for Rockefeller since Gov. George Romney of Michigan dropped out of the race.

Other Rockefeller supporters include Govs. Winthrop Rockefeller of Arkansas, Spiro T. Agnew of Maryland and Tom McCall of Oregon. Romney has demonstrated reluctance to back Rockefeller, who supported the Michigan governor before he withdrew.

Some politicians think that Gov. James A. Rhodes of Ohio might be induced to back Rockefeller. But the canny Rhodes is likely to wait around for the New Yorker to demonstrate that he has a good chance for the nomination before he makes any commitments.

Nixon has some governors on his side, too, and some potential favorite sons. Sen. John G. Tower, who expects to be the first ballot choice of Texas' 56-vote delegation, has made it clear he prefers Nixon or Reagan over Rockefeller.

The 58-vote Illinois delegation, of which Sen. Charles H. Percy hopes to be the favorite son, is regarded as likely to be strong for Nixon.

New Jersey's 40 votes could find their way into Rockefeller's column. But they may depend on how Sen. Clifford P. Case reads Rockefeller's stance on Vietnam after the New York governor's speech on the issue today.

Pennsylvania could be helpful with 64 votes, but Gov. Raymond P. Shafer has been playing his cards close to his vest.

Rockefeller's claim that he can win in November and Nixon can't has been somewhat tarnished recently by polls showing that Nixon could defeat the three leading Democratic candidates.

But one of the apparently telling arguments that nudged the New York governor into active candidacy was said to have been the report of Sen. Thurston B. Morton and William E. Miller, the 1964 vice presidential nominee, that they had found on a Midwestern swing that Republicans there are still dubious that Nixon could win.

Questions 'Common Sense' Approach

Berkeley Prof Speaks on Science

"The problem today is to invent a society where all people express their values in the development of the society," a University of California Berkeley scientist said in a lecture at the University last night.

C. West Churchman, professor of business administration and city and regional planning and associate director of the Space Sciences Laboratory of the University of California at Berkeley, said that philosophy can play an important role in attacking some of the precepts of common sense. He took issue with the "common sense" idea that the dispassionate and rational approach to social problems is the best approach possible.

Using management and science as two examples of important social institutions, Churchman questioned the accepted formula for rational decision-making—that the role of science is to advise and the role of management is to decide. Noting the increasing use of scientists in an advisory capacity to both government and private corporations, he pointed out that many scientific advisory panels in Washington are providing administrators and legislators with considerable advice beyond the competence of science about the allocation of funds and personnel.

He maintained that advice cannot be given dispassionately and rationally because the scientist, like everyone else, does not have an objective, rational approach to the total aspect of a decision.

Noting the various ways of evaluating social trends, or the development of a society — gross national product, or the degree of education of a people, for example — Churchman suggested another measure of performance of a society or institution — the extent to which an individual can do something about what happens to him, rather than the extent to which he is directed by society. This emphasizes the "for" and "of" the people.

The scientist can be of great service, especially to himself, Churchman concluded, if he studies the critical urban, national, and international problems of his day. He can become rehabilitated, in fact, somewhat more human, somewhat more privileged, as his dispassionate and rational mind becomes more open to learning about social reality from more privileged people.

He suggested, "ought to admit that they don't really know whether some of our laws are depriving people of the right to contribute. The experts in this matter are in the ghettos, or in crime, or among the poor."

The scientist can be of great service, especially to himself, Churchman concluded, if he studies the critical urban, national, and international problems of his day. He can become rehabilitated, in fact, somewhat more human, somewhat more privileged, as his dispassionate and rational mind becomes more open to learning about social reality from more privileged people.

Gerson To Contest USG Vote Docking

Vote docking in the recent elections of the Undergraduate Student Government will be contested as unconstitutional by two USG members.

Steve Gerson, New Party candidate for vice president, and campaign manager, Joe Chirra, have argued that "by docking 81 people's votes, 81 people were disenfranchised."

Chirra said this disenfranchising is disavowing the United States Constitution, and therefore the USG Constitution because the latter upholds all the statutes of the U.S. document.

Chirra said approximately 2,000 persons who voted for Gerson in the election did not have their vote counted due to the dock.

The case will come before the USG's Supreme Court tomorrow afternoon.

Although some people may consider this petty, this is the first time the basic idea of docking has been contested," Chirra said. "We think it's unconstitutional," he added.

But Medlar has found it impossible to get hitting from first base and third base, positions usually relied upon to provide some

That's the kind of luck Medlar's club has had lately—all bad. At the beginning of the season the chances were good that the Lions would return to the District II play-offs, but that 7-5 record that could be 12-0 makes the prospects seem very slim at best.

Of course, with the starting lineup that Pa-

Don Abbey, State's outstanding junior full-back (6-2, 230) and place kicker, hasn't seen any contact since his knee went out on him last December, preparing for the Gator Bowl. The cast was removed just recently, so that he can go through only limited drills for the next two weeks. Assuming that he'll be fully recovered by EVALUATION: Top three or four running backs will be hard to equal anywhere, but injuries and inexperience have clouded the possibility of adequate depth.

The depth may be promising at fullback, but at the other running back positions, Paterno will just have to wait for the hospital reports. In the meantime, he'd better protect his three superstars as if the season depended on them. It does.

(NEXT WEEK: THE QUARTERBACKS)

The Phils' major threat came in the fourth inning when Johnny Callison led off with a double off the right field wall. Cardwell, who had easily retired the next three batters without the runner advancing. In the ninth, the Phils put runners on first and second with two out, but Cardwell got

NEW YORK (AP) — Sandy Valdespino and Andy Kosco, a pair of former Minnesota Twins, appear to be the best of the lot of 23 players drafted last November for at total of $524,000.

Due to the illness of Rico Carty, the Atlanta Braves' regular left fielder, Valdespino is being given a chance to play more than expected.

the Oakland A's last fall, was put on the A's Vancouver roster instead of the big club. The Yankees, who had their eye on him for some time, grabbed him for $25,000.

Only 13 of the 23 draftees still are on major league rosters.

The Chicago Cubs have three of the six draftees still left in the National League. Jose Arcia, a young Cuban picked from the St. Louis Cardinals' system, opened the season for the Chicagoans at second base; but is a utility man.

He will be handy when the young Cub infielders have to leave for military duty.

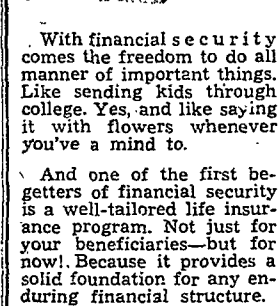

Ramón Hernandez, a left-handed pitcher who was with Atlanta in 1967 but also was sent to the minors, has seen occasional relief work with the Cubs. Catcher Bill Plummer, snatched from the Cards, has been sitting.

Chuck Hiller, a seven-year major league vet who also found himself in the minors due to the Phillies' roster problems last fall, got another chance when Pittsburgh drafted him for $25,000. Hiller is a left-handed pinch hitter and infield spare with the Pirates.

Cincinnati gambled on a $25,000 draft choice, Jim Schaffer, another veteran left unprotected by the Phils at San Diego.

Included in the program will be a film showing the American team in the 1967 World Championships in Vichy, France, and a description of the sport and orientation into the sport of rowing.

MISSING THE MARK during a recent afternoon of spring practice, sophomore quarterback hopeful Mike Cooper passes one into the practice net. Paterno said yesterday that Chuck Burkhardt still leads the competition for quarterback, but one scrimmage could move Wally Cifarelli, Terry Stump or Cooper into the picture.
