North Vietnamese May Shift Strategy

PAN HANOI (UPI)—A North Vietnamese Politburo member might signal some sort of strategy shift by the Communist side in the Vietnam peace talks.

The Politburo man is Le Duc Tho, who left here last February when the long standoff in the talks was setting in. Tho's side in the talks provided any basis for optimism that a breakthrough was near, despite reports after the last full-scale meeting Wednesday that the Viet Cong had shifted its position on the possibility of dialogue with South Vietnam's government.

This led to speculation that Tho may be bringing new instructions to the Paris delegation. Such instructions could determine whether North Vietnam would continue its present hardline policy or make some move toward ending the stalemate at the talks.

In the past, important developments have coincided with Tho's arrival from Hanoi. One such occasion was the agreement ending the impasse over the shape of the conference table and the seating arrangements. This permitted convocation of the full-scale talks, and it has been clear that the Russians had a hand in bringing it about.

U.S. Armor Overruns Enemy Bunker

SAIGON—U.S. armor overran an enemy bunker complex yesterday in a four-hour battle on the southern edges of the Boi Loi woods 35 miles northwest of Saigon.

At dusk, 138 enemy bodies were found on the battlefield. U.S. casualties were two wounded. Several armored vehicles were damaged.

The U.S. Command reported that 23 helicopters and 10 planes were lost in the past week, making it one of the most expensive weeks of the war for the aerial forces. Most of the helicopters were shot down and the others were lost in collisions or enemy attacks on U.S. bases, the command said. It gave no details of plane losses.

The week's setback came in a lull in the enemy's current offensive. But U.S. operations in search of the North Vietnamese and Viet Cong have not slackened and the helicopter losses show this. U.S. officers say the enemy now has more sophisticated anti-aircraft guns than he did in the Tet offensive.

Former German Leader Von Papen Dies

OBERSASBACH, Germany—Franz von Papen, whose political misdeeds as chancellor in the early 1930s helped open the way for Hitler's rise to power, died at his secluded home in this Baden village yesterday, striving to the end to win some recognition for his service to Germany.

It was in the political turmoil of 1932 that von Papen's miscalculations aided the Nazis' rise although the party was nearly bankrupt.

President Paul von Hindenburg named him chancellor on June 1 and with two weeks Von Papen lifted the ban on Hitler's storm troopers. A wave of political violence followed.

Von Papen resigned as chancellor on Nov. 11, 1932, after Hindenburg turned down his plan for the declaration of a state of emergency and the indefinite suspension of the Reichstag.

After World War II, Von Papen, the non-Nazi, was placed in the dock at the Nuernberg War Crimes Trials along with the surviving top Nazis.

The court ruled that Von Papen had been guilty of grave "offenses against political morality."

The Nation

Nixon Calls for Job Corps Reduction

WASHINGTON—The Nixon administration is holding confidential files on gang rapists, homosexuality, extortion and drug use at Job Corps sites as trump card in the angry dispute over its plans to abandon half the centers.

Administration officials insist the investigators' reports were not used in deciding which centers to close. These decisions were based, they said, on a complicated grading system taking into account a center's dropout rate, job placement record and achievement rate.

But these same officials concede the files reflect conditions which could be the underlying cause some centers' poor ratings.

And while officials say they don't want the reports to become involved in the Job Corps controversy, sources reported some of the documents already have been shown to one congressman opposed to the cutback plan. The congressman "bugged out his eyes" when he saw them, the source claimed.

President Nixon's plan to eliminate 57 centers has triggered bitter debate and stormy hearings in Congress. Resolutions have been introduced in both the House and Senate asking him to shelve the shutdown.

Nixon Seeks Ban on Mail Pornography

WASHINGTON—President Nixon asked Congress yesterday for new laws to combat food and smut mail which he termed "unsolicited, unwanted and deeply offensive to those who receive it."

"American homes are being bombarded with the largest volume of sex-oriented mail in history," Nixon said in a special message.

Mothers and fathers by the tens of thousands have written to the White House and the Congress. They resent these intrusions into their homes, and they are asking for federal assistance to protect their children against exposure to erotic publications."

The President took note that the problem is complicated by the First Amendment guarantee of a free press, but he added: "The courts have not left society defenseless against the smut peddler; they have not ruled out reasonable government action."

At the same time, Nixon said, the ultimate answer to the problems lies not with government but with people.

Pittsburgh Teachers Told To End Boycott

PITTSBURGH—Striking teachers were ordered yesterday to end a five-day boycott which has closed 16 schools to about 8,000 pupils in the suburbs of Monroeville and Pitcairn.

Acting on a petition of the Gateway Union school board, Judge G. W. Price Jr. of Allegheny County issued a preliminary injunction restraining teachers from "continuing an illegal strike."

He ordered the nearly 400 teachers to return to classes on Monday. He also issued an accompanying ruling ordering sheriff's deputies to report to the schools Monday to prevent picketing and maintain order.

An association spokesman said members will meet Sunday to decide whether to comply with the order. Meanwhile, the association and the school board have agreed to meet today in a last ditch attempt to resolve the dispute.

More than 350 of the district's 408 teachers walked out of school on Monday morning, claiming the board refused to discuss a new teacher contract with them.

Osmond Lab Stays Open In Spite of Bomb Scare

Classes were held in Osmond Laboratory yesterday afternoon despite a bomb threat made in a letter received yesterday morning.

The letter sent to Campus Patrol stated that a bomb had been placed in the building and was set for detonation between 1 and 1:30 p.m.

The building stayed open with notices posted at entrances giving students and personnel the option to remain or leave.

The threat was the eighth against a University building and the first against Osmond. It was the first time Campus Patrol was notified by letter instead of by telephone.

The $5,000 reward is still being offered to anyone who has information leading to the apprehension of the individual or individuals responsible for the threats.

Elsewhere on campus, men living in Sprout Hall were evacuated from the building at 2:30 a.m. yesterday after a small fire was discovered in a janitor's closet on the eighth floor of the building.

The fire, of unknown origin, was extinguished by students. Damage was minor.

Injunction Read In HUB Students, Faculty Question School's Admissions Policy

By DENISE BOWMAN
Collegian Staff Writer

The University's "order of priorities" in admissions policies was questioned by students and faculty members who met for nearly an hour and a half yesterday with T. Sherman Stanford, director of admissions.

The decision to meet with Stanford was made at Thursday night's discussion on racism sponsored by the University Conference, a group of 30 faculty members and graduate students working to effect change within the University structure.

Wells Keddle, Students for a Democratic Society adviser, who accompanied the group, asked Stanford, "Why expand the HUB (Hetzel Union Building), why add to the stadium, when this money could be used to admit more black students?"

Order of Priorities

Keddle also asked Stanford, "Who sets the order of priorities for University funds, and can funds be transferred from other projects to aid in the admission of more blacks?"

Stanford replied that a $1 million bill is currently before the legislature which, if passed, will provide sufficient funds for a more expanded education program for the disadvantaged. He said he used the term "disadvantaged" because to admit students solely on the basis of race is just as illegal as to reject them on the same basis.

The group also questioned Stanford on the University's basis for admission. Stanford said that, in the past, the high school record was a "good, solid way of selecting stu-

A student-sought preliminary injunction was served yesterday to seven named students and 50 John and Jane Does to restrain demonstrators from blocking access to military recruiters in the Hetzel Union Building.

The injunction, served yesterday afternoon at 1:10 p.m. by Centre County Sheriff Richard V. Waite, was obtained Thursday by three student members of the Young Americans for Freedom.

Yesterday's demonstration and sit-in was the second day of protest against the military's involvement in Vietnam and against military recruitment in the HUB.

During the demonstration, three students burned what they alleged to be their current draft cards.

The injunction prevents the demonstrators from obstructing "any person, through physical or other means, from freely gaining access to the area utilized by recruiters for the Armed Forces of the United States."

Named on the injunction were Martin Zehr, Norm Schwartz, Tom Richdale, Russ Farb, Laurey Petkov, Stephen Eis and Jeff Berger.

Laura Wertheimer, Jack Swisher, R. Charles Betzko and YAF obtained the injunction. Judge R. Paul Campbell set a hearing for 1:30 p.m. Tuesday in the Centre County Court house in Bellefonte.

Student Action

Doug Cooper, former YAF chairman, said the group sought the injunction to show other universities and colleges that students can and do take action against fellow students.

The demonstration began at 12:30 p.m. with the singing of protest and anti-war songs. Scott Gibbs, co-chairman of Students for a Democratic Society, told the crowd of 250 that the protestors would continue their "peaceful demonstration against military recruiting at Penn State."

Demonstrators were allowed to sit in front of the table and a path was kept open to the table. William F. Fuller, HUB manager, and Mike Alexander, president of the University Union Board and others served as "marshalls" to keep the path open.

Waite served the injunction to the named students. Barry Stem, unsuccessful candidate for the Undergraduate Student Government presidency, whose name did not appear on the injunction, asked Waite if his name could be placed on it with the others. Waite made no comment.

Denying Civil Rights

Berger told the crowd over an open microphone "YAF thinks we are interfering with the University but the University doesn't think so. YAF opposes peaceful, lawful demonstrations. They are trying to deny SDS their civil rights."

"YAF claimed SDS was doing 'irreparable harm' to the citizens and government of the U.S.," Berger said. "Hopefully we could be doing irreparable harm to the government," he added.

Richdale said that the demonstrators were not here to have a YAF-SDS political confrontation. "We are here to protest the military and policies of the U.S. government," Richdale said. He added that he does not "recognize YAF."

Wells Keddle, SDS adviser and assistant professor of labor studies, said "YAF was trying to testify that they did not have access to the recruiting table, but there are no witnesses willing to testify."

"Fuller claims that there was free access to the table," Keddle added.

Alex McKinley, Bill Middleman and Joel Kautman (6th-counseling Hillsdale, N.J.) allegedly burned their draft classification card. McKinley said it was a "symbolic gesture" and what really bothered him was that "Dick Gregory's autograph was on the card."

Middleman said that he burned his card "in the interest of peace and freedom in the U.S."

When asked if he considered it his duty to turn in the draft card burners, Raymond O. Murphy, dean of student affairs, replied, "I don't have to turn anyone in." When asked if he would turn in the students, he shrugged his shoulders.

After Waite read the injunction there were jeers from the crowd. He then announced that the injunction was in effect immediately.

"Smear" Tactic

Petkov, one of those named on the injunction, said that the injunction "was a smear tactic by YAF."

"I think the injunction is ludicrous," Petkov said. He added "YAF continually avoids the real issues... they refuse to debate American foreign policy publicly and because of this I am considering getting an injunction against YAF for blocking intellectual growth."

Zehr, whose name also appeared on the injunction, said "many students named on it were not even sitting in or involved in the demonstration. I was sitting at the SDS table the whole time (away from the recruiting table)."

Injunction Not Violated

Richdale called the injunction a "YAF scare tactic." He said that he "knew it (the injunction) was coming and that it was YAF instigated. We have not violated it and we will not violate it."

Richdale also said that he had been in front of the table but was not sitting there. He added that he left the HUB at 3:30 p.m.

Cooper said YAF obtained the injunction "to prevent any conflict." "If nothing happens, no one is hurt (by the injunction)," Cooper said.

Berger told The Daily Collegian that he left the demonstration Thursday when the sit-in was just beginning. "I was not in front of the recruiting table. I was chosen by YAF because they know who I am and they are politically opposed to me," he said.

Ambiguous Situation

Cooper called the entire situation "ambiguous." "It's not exactly free access to the recruiters, but you can get in there."

Jon Wineland, co-chairman of SDS, said the demonstration held Thursday was not in any way connected with the traditional Soviet display of military strength on May Day.

Wineland said that May 1 was "National Draft Card Turn-in Day" and "Free Huey Newton Day." Newton was defense secretary for the Black Panther Party and is currently in jail.

"The history of May Day dates from 1866 and the eight-hour-day labor movement," Wineland said. He referred to a demonstration held in Chicago May 3, 1866 to protest police brutality. "The demonstrators were brutally attacked by police," and deaths resulted on both sides, Wineland said.

A White Investigation Forum Views Racism

By MARGE COHEN
Collegian Feature Editor

Racist overtones in University policy as well as in faculty and student attitudes were examined Thursday night at a forum sponsored by the New University Conference.

Planned as "a white investigation of racism at the University," the NUC forum "ventilated" problems faced by black students matriculating on the campus and by black students denied admission because of a racist admissions policy.

Donn Bailey, instructor of speech and member of the Black Student Union, told the predominantly white student audience that "black students have a problem here."

"One of the major problems," he said, "is the hostility—either overt or covert—in the faces and carriage of white professors."

Discrimination Cited

Instances he cited of racial discrimination were supported by other speakers, including Rick Collins, BSU president; Nicholas Sanders, assistant professor of educational psychology; and William Semple, assistant professor of architecture.

"Most students have grievances," Bailey said, but at this forum, we are concerned with black student problems."

Bailey said some professors in the College of Business, whose "names are not appropriate now," announce one cut policy at the beginning of the term and later revise that policy "in the negative view of the black student."

Psychiatrists at Ritenour are just as guilty of racist practices, he asserted. Bailey told of one student, seeking a medical statement to drop a course in genetics. He was advised by a health center psychiatrist to quit school the next time he wanted to drop any courses.

Whites Must Help

Rather, he continued, it is "more than appropriate that white people" help to resolve problems faced by the black man in America—after all, "the predicament we are in now was created by white people," Bailey said.

As for black admissions for next year, Bailey said he questioned how many black students had been admitted. "No one can answer that question," he added, saying he was "not calling into question the judgment of the central Administration, but its integrity."

"That's a serious charge," he concluded.

Collins agreed. And he continued to inform the audience of original plans for already-enrolled black students to assist in recruiting prospective black students. Told initially that they "should get 3-400 black students," Collins cited the announced "113 disadvantaged" students admitted to the University for Fall Term.

Black Recruitment

"Not black," he stressed. "Disadvantaged."

To the Administration cry of a lack of funds to support black recruitment and economically disadvantaged youth, Collins answered that there was enough money to send 11 lions to the commonwealth campuses, but not to admit black students.

Referring to "the people in Old Main," Collins said he thought they were "incapable of any sort of integrity," the result of racism. And, he said, the BSU has "boycotted" the newly established office for Student Discussion. As Bailey explained, the black demands need action, not more talk.

"Colleges don't want to lower standards," Collins said, explaining the universities' rationale that it is "against the law to discriminate." But, he continued, "the BSU maintains that college boards (Scholastic Aptitude Tests) violate the Civil Rights Act of 1964" in that the examinations are "not appropriate to anyone not in the white middle class."

Changes Necessary

"This place has to change," he asserted, adding, however, that there was "no indication" that changes are being made.

Meanwhile, Sanders, a member of the University Senate Committee on Academic Admissions and Athletic Standards, told of a proposal to be presented to the Senate in June calling for revision of the current admission policy.

The proposed policy would guarantee University enrollment proportionate to the population of the Commonwealth, he explained. Though it is premature to determine the outcome of the proposal, Sanders said he was optimistic about the policy's acceptance.

Semple said the current admission policy is based on "arbitrary white middle class standards." Talk of "lowering standards" is a "scare tactic" used to subtly "instill fear in the academic community."

"If 1,000 black students were here in the Fall," he said, "this campus probably would be enriched — and God knows, this campus could use some enrichment."

Student Unrest Grows Students Disrupt Colleges In New York City, Texas Militant Students Refuse Congressional Invitation

By The Associated Press

New student disorders boiled over in the East and Southwest yesterday.

Black students took over the president's office at Southern Methodist University in Dallas, and black students, rampaging at Queens College in New York, forced the closing of that school of 5,000 for a second day.

Brief fist fights broke out between 50 blacks and 50 whites at Queens College. President Joseph McMurray summoned several hundred police to the campus.

About 75 Brooklyn College students invaded a dean's office and ransacked files while another group tossed smoke bombs in the main library and knocked books from shelves.

Fire officials inspected the Brooklyn College campus, and closed the library and La Guardia Hall, where students, many of them from Students for a Democratic Society, had marched inside.

House Republican Leader Gerald R. Ford, meanwhile, forecast a taxpayers' revolt against spending for higher education unless university officials clamp down on student violence.

Quiet returned to one of New York's many troubled campuses, Columbia University, when black law students left the Law School library after an overnight sit-in.

Legal proceedings were pending against 200 students, led by SDS members, who left two Columbia buildings they were occupying after arrest warrants against them were signed. They were demanding greater black enrollment at the Ivy League school of 20,000 students.

WASHINGTON (AP) — Militant student leaders have turned down an invitation to appear at a congressional hearing on campus unrest because they say they don't want to give Congress "legitimacy."

Rep. Edith Green, (D-Ore.) chairman of the House education subcommittee that has been holding hearings on college violence, said she asked members of Students for a Democratic Society at several colleges to give their side of the issue.

"They informed me that if they accepted the invitation it would indicate they recognized the legitimacy of Congress," she said Friday.

Mrs. Green has had officials from Columbia University and San Francisco State College before her subcommittee and will hear from Harvard's president as well as the president of the University of Michigan. Columbia and Harvard professors will testify Friday.

The continuing campus disruptions have produced a hardening position in the Nixon administration against student violence. And they have increased also the clamor in Congress for sterner measures against the students responsible.

The only federal law now on the books dealing with the situation calls for withdrawing federal aid to any student convicted of a crime as a result of a campus disturbance.

In examining previous witnesses the subcommittee has learned that colleges are reluctant to invoke this law because it singles out for punishment only one class of student — those receiving federal aid — and because it applies only one penalty to what may be a wide variety of acts committed during a campus uprising.

Students in Mathematics To Sit on Course Committee

By LINDA McCLAIN
Collegian Staff Writer

Students in the Department of Mathematics can look forward to such changes as the addition of class syllabi and student participation on a faculty committee, the Undergraduate Mathematics Advisory Council has announced.

Faculty members have agreed to issue syllabi for math courses next fall. Students will have the prerogative to request a syllabus if it is not provided.

Two students will serve on a faculty committee investigating the Math 61 and 62 courses. The committee will consider ways of improving the course and the possibility of using different textbooks.

Questionnaires will be distributed to students in the College of the Liberal Arts who have student advisers to determine the merits of this system. Presently, math students have faculty advisers. "We would like to see some form of student advisers in the math department," according to Bob Chanin, chairman of the council. "There are many forms of student government on this campus, and in most cases they accomplish nothing. Here, we have students working with the faculty and getting results. Perhaps if more students tried working through their departments, we could see changes in this university," Chanin said.

Bill Angstadt, a council member, explained that the council "would like to be a vehicle between the students and the faculty in an attempt to better the Math Department."

The council has heard many complaints from students concerning multiple choice tests used in the Math 60 series.

Council members also have reported that students have complained about the methods of teaching employed by many instructors and have questioned the quality of their teachers. Chanin said that the council would welcome comments from any student who has had math courses. They may contact the council through the Math Department, he said.

Benefit Disadvantaged Students

Tutors Aid Youngsters

By NED FAUST
Collegian Staff Writer

Disadvantaged students in the Bellefonte school system are being tutored by some 35 Penn State students in a Cultural Foundations of Education course.

The program has been going on since Fall Term. It was initiated to give education majors early exposure to teaching and to benefit educationally disadvantaged students in the school system.

Francis R. McKenna, assistant professor of educational services, and Donald W. Protheroe, assistant professor of elementary education, are coordinators of the program.

Applicants are selected on a basis which balances males and females, high and low scholastic averages and urban and rural backgrounds. A majority of students chosen are education majors. Some also are from the College of the Liberal Arts.

Tutors have been placed in Bellefonte and Pleasant Gap Elementary Schools and in the Bellefonte Junior High School. "Those students tutored are children with learning difficulties. A majority are economically disadvantaged," McKenna said.

"Judging the success of the program is very difficult," he added. "The only indices of success we have at this point and time are that administrators and teachers are requesting more students for tutoring positions," he said.

Tutors involved in the program are enthusiastic about working with students and about getting teaching experience so early.

"Everyone should try this type of program. Schools are crying for this type of help," Barbara Elliott (6th elementary education-State College), said. Mrs. Elliott added that she is satisfied with her tutoring progress and expressed optimism for her future work.

This is the best program I have ever been involved in at Penn State," Sunny Lehrman (6th human development-Harrisburg) said. Miss Lehrman and many other tutors said they had difficulty with their early tutor-student relationships, however they added that they are pleased with their progress.

The tutoring program will be continued if the College of Education approves plans for Fall Term 1969.

Transporting tutors to the schools is the main factor hindering program expansion. Currently, individual tutors are driving to and from schools in car pools.

McKenna said the program cannot expand without additional funds. But he said he is hopeful that the College of Education will find some method of providing such funds.

Gun Control Legislation Neglected by 26 States

By The Associated Press

It was almost 5 1/2 years ago that gunfire from a mail-order rifle cut down President John F. Kennedy and a cry was heard across the land for gun control.

Yet 26 states still place little or virtually no restrictions on the sale of firearms. This was shown in an Associated Press survey yesterday.

Legislation is pending in only three states where the purchase of firearms is made as easy as ordering a drink from a neighborhood bar.

Court Appeal Dismissed

However, proponents of strict gun controls have taken heart as a result of a U.S. Supreme Court decision of last Monday. In a one-sentence ruling — "The appeal is dismissed for want of a substantial federal question" — the court let stand a New Jersey firearms control law, probably the toughest in the nation.

That law requires all purchasers of rifles and shotguns to obtain permits and identification cards from police. Applicants must submit to fingerprinting.

The law seeks to screen out ex-convicts. The

New Jersey law had been challenged by gun dealers and sportsmen who contended it invades private rights, violates the Constitution and will have little effect on crime control.

But while the Supreme Court decision would seem to strengthen arguments for strong statutes, little is expected soon from state legislatures racing toward summer recesses.

Waiting Period

Two days after Monday's decision, however, Gov. Daniel J. Evans of Washington signed a bill requiring written application for the purchase of firearms and a 72-hour period before purchase and actual delivery. The time interval was required to allow law enforcement officials to check further the credentials of the buyer so as to prohibit the sale to convicted felons, drug addicts and mental patients.

Evans' signature made Washington the 14th state to require clearance for purchase or possession.

In addition to Washington and New Jersey, only Illinois requires permits before the purchase of all firearms, regardless of type. But the Illinois law neither requires registry of the firearm nor application for permit for each purchase.

Though naturally looking ahead to the Easterns, Boyle is not taking the Georgetown linksmen lightly.

Good Condition

As anyone who has been out on the University course in the past week knows, conditions are very good.

In general, coach Boyle is pleased with the development of his team. "We still have a couple of players who are erratic but most of our guys have their games in real fine shape."

LOUISVILLE (AP) — A wave of new support for Top Knight and growing skepticism of the prowess of unbeaten Majestic Prince portended a co-favorite role at equal odds for these two racing colts from opposite ends of the continent today in the 95th Kentucky Derby.

On the eve of the big race, California's Majestic Prince was first choice at 6.5 with Florida's Top Knight 9.5 in the small tight-horse field.

Post time is 5:30 p.m. EDT. Millions will watch on television CBS-TV, 5 p.m. EDT.

having the track to themselves. They were to be challenged by improving Arts and Letters and fast-finishing Dike, each at 5-1, and the four forgotten outsiders expected to stage their own Little Four consolation—Fleet Allied, 20-1; Traffic Mark, 30-1; Ocean Roar and Rae Jet, each 50-1.

This time Hartack is aboard Majestic Prince and he will be seeking to match Eddie Arcaro's record of five riding victories.

If the track turns up goosy, the word is to watch out for Dike, who is at his best in slow going, and dark-horse Ocean Roar, who once won a race in Ohio with mud up to his knee caps and so thick some contenders failed to finish.
