Faculty Says Pass-Fail Decision of Each College

By KITTY PHILBIN
Collegian USG Reporter

Faculty members at a forum last night on compulsory physical education courses said putting such courses on a pass-fail system will ultimately be a decision of individual colleges.

L. P. Greenhill, assistant to the vice president of resident instruction, told the group that guidelines set up by individual colleges on the pass-fail system going into effect next fall ignore the question of physical education. Colleges do not say whether it would be permitted, Greenhill said.

Pass-fail is designed to involve only free elective courses which precludes required physical education.

Student responses at the forum was outspoken, ranging from the opinion that "Ideally, phys ed shouldn't be graded at all," to a request that the courses be mandatory pass-fail grading, and required for more than four terms.

Not Academic

The argument was raised that physical education is not an academic subject and should not be ranked in grades.

The goals of the physical education program were outlined by Robert J. Scannell, professor of health and physical education.

According to Scannell, the courses are designed to give students "immediate fitness," plus imparting "attitude, desire, understanding, and skill necessary to keep them in good health throughout life."

Scannell said schools throughout the country are in a "constant state of flux" in regard to grading their physical education courses.

"Schools put it on, and take it off grading; 85 per cent of the schools in this country have it graded, although we can find the exceptions very easily," Scannell said.

The exceptions include the Ivy League schools and military academies.

Larry Spancake, student member of the Senate Committee on Resident Instruction, rationalized pass-fail on the basis that it is not an academic subject and is therefore "qualitatively different from other courses in the University."

Spancake also said rather than teaching skills that can be used later in life, grading physical education works against students trying to learn since other students take sports they are already proficient in.

A student questioned the success of pass-fail in physical education, and asked whether merely discussing the problem without action was "just a waste of time."

Scannell said any student can win permission to speak on the floor of the Senate, and can introduce a bill with the aid of one of the 200 senators.

Scannell questioned the amount of concern on the part of students, noting that only 10 attended the forum.

Jon Fox, past vice president of the Undergraduate Student Government, noted the results of USG's poll on the issue, indicating that the majority of students prefer a mandatory pass-fail system.

Shocked

Scannell said he was "shocked by the figures" of the poll. "They are completely different from the survey we conducted last spring," he said.

More recently, Scannell said that yesterday George W. Harvey, head of men's required physical education, asked 550 men required for the second five weeks of physical education whether they would prefer pass-fail grading.

Harvey said that of the 550, 25 indicated a preference for pass-fail. In a second period of registration, 43 of over 500 preferred pass-fail.

Student complaints at the forum dealt mostly with specific instances of alleged unfair grading or teacher practices.

Collegian Administration Reporter

Seven Colleges of the University yesterday announced their plans for implementing the new Satisfactory-Unsatisfactory grading system.

Agriculture students may schedule up to 12 credits on the S-U basis, with not more than one course on the S-U system in any one term.

Courses required by the College of Agriculture for all majors, as outlined under the heading "Basic Minimum Requirements for Graduation" in the catalog of Baccalaureate Degree Programs, may not be scheduled on the S-U basis. In other words, at least 12 credits in speaking and writing skills, 25 in biological and physical sciences, six in mathematics, 12 in social sciences or humanities, and four in physical education, must be scheduled under the conventional (A-B-C-D-F) system.

Courses in the student's major specifically prescribed by prefix and number in the Baccalaureate Degree Programs catalogue may not be scheduled on the S-U basis.

College of Arts and Architecture

A major in the College of Arts and Architecture may schedule any course for which he is eligible under the S-U program except those courses in his major subject.

Seven Colleges Define Regulations

Pass-Fail Plans Announced

Students may take not more than 18 credits on the S-U basis from among the following groups of courses in the CBA curriculum:

• from the free elective category — any course

• from the science arts, humanities, foreign languages, social sciences, and the directed elective categories — any course which requires as prerequisite at least one other specified course in the same field.

The intent of the latter requirement is to prevent students from electing and concentrating S-U grades in fundamental introductory courses in the sciences, and social sciences, and to encourage them to use the option for intermediate and advanced courses in these fields as was the intent of the University Senate action.

All other courses such as the business core, the major field, and mathematics requirements must be taken under the conventional grading system.

Health and Physical Education

Students in this college will be limited in nine credits on the Satisfactory-Unsatisfactory system within their graduation credit count.

Students who desire to utilize the S-U system for courses which are not a part of the specific degree program may schedule up to the maximum number of credits (18) on the S-U basis.

Health and Physical Education majors may schedule free electives and Humanities electives on the S-U system.

Recreation and Parks majors may take one cultural arts or free elective course in each of their 7th, 9th or 10th terms on the S-U basis.

Park Administration option students may take the same courses during each of their 7th, 9th or 12th terms.

Outdoor Education option students may take a cultural arts, arts or free elective course during each of their 7th, 8th, 9th or 10th terms.

College of Engineering

A student in the College of Engineering may take up to 12 credits under the S-U grading program. These credits may be selected from the biological science group, the social-humanistic group or from the elective courses other than in the major. Technical electives in the major may also be selected with the approval of the head of the student's department.

College of Human Development

Students in the College of Human Development may schedule as many as 18 credits in any course on the S-U basis. Courses graded for all students on a Pass-Fail basis, such as GFS 311, will not apply toward the 18-credit maximum.

Students will not be allowed to schedule more than two S-U courses in any one term.

Advanced standing students will be restricted to no more than nine credits if they have transferred nine or more credits from another institution.

College of Science

The faculty of the College of Science voted that each department will administer its own S-U grading system that will operate within the outlines established by the University Senate.

Department of Astronomy: nine credits of only unrestricted electives on a S-U system.

Biochemistry: up to 18 S-U credits of courses that are not required by number in the catalog statement of the biochemistry major, plus physical education.

Biophysics and Botany: Nine credits of only unrestricted electives

Chemistry: a maximum of 12 credits on the S-U basis selected from the unrestricted electives and the social science and the humanities requirements.

Computer Science: students may take up to 18 credits on a S-U basis of all courses except for computer science courses. Speech 200, English 1, 2 or 3 or Electrical Engineering 471.

Mathematics: students may take 18 credits on a S-U basis subject to the following restrictions: a maximum of six credits in the sciences excluding Physics 201, 202, 203, 204, 221, 222, and 224. A maximum of six credits in the Humanities, Social Sciences and the Arts. Any other S-U credits can be only unrestricted electives.

Medical Technology and Microbiology: students may take up to 18 credits on the S-U basis in physical education, the arts, humanities, and social sciences and unrestricted electives.

Physics: students may take up to 18 credits on a S-U basis except in physics, mathematics and chemistry.

Premedicine: up to 18 credits on an S-U basis of only unrestricted electives.

Premedical-Medical Program: as this is an experimental program under the joint control of both the Jefferson Medical College and the University, no courses may be taken on a S-U basis.

Science and Zoology: up to nine credits of only unrestricted electives may be taken on the S-U basis.

Not Yet Released

Plans for the Colleges of Earth and Mineral Sciences, Liberal Arts, and Education have not yet been released.

"Satisfactory" in a course scheduled on the S-U basis is defined as the equivalent of "D" or better on the conventional A-B-C-D-F grading system in that course. Quality points for S-U courses will not be tabulated toward the student's grade average, but credit will be recorded toward his total credit requirements if he passes the course. An unsatisfactory grade will receive neither credit nor quality points.

Students To Present IDA Petition to USG

By JIM HARVEY and MIKE ALEXANDER

Collegian Staff Writers

Students protesting the University's affiliation with the Institute for Defense Analysis met last night to discuss documentation of specific IDA activities. Neil Buckley, traveling correspondent for Students for a Democratic Society, addressed about 100 students who discussed IDA and methods of ejecting it from campus.

An IDA fact sheet described the organization of IDA and some of its alleged projects. The main research and development facilities are located at Arlington, Va. Here, the paper claims, weapon mock-ups and simulation models are constructed. IDA computers, used extensively in the processing of data for counterinsurgency work, are located at Princeton, N.J., the fact sheet states.

The aspect of IDA most vitally connected with the 11 universities involved is the Jason Division, a large number of professors actively recruited by the universities to do part-time IDA work, the statement claims.

Economic Fact

"The reasons IDA is accepted by the universities is two-fold," Buckley charged. The most obvious reason is the economic funds come from the federal government — much of it from the military, he said.

"Another fundamental reason for trustees' supporting IDA," Buckley said, "is their personal holdings in corporations which rely upon institutions such as IDA to prevent insolvency in underdeveloped countries where these companies have markets, access to raw materials, and cheap labor to work in their factories located there."

"We know Penn State is formally affiliated with IDA," Buckley said. "We also know of defense-related projects being carried out at this university. We must make value judgements as to the direction and goal of these projects," he added.

Petition

Following the formal meeting, groups were dispatched to residence hall areas to get signatures for a petition to be presented at a Undergraduate Student Government meeting tonight. A petition to be considered by USG must have a minimum of 2,000 signatures and be presented before 7 p.m. the day of the meeting.

The circulated petition contains two articles:

• The University shall make available as public record all documents in its possession relating to Penn State's IDA work.

• The Board of Trustees shall convene in emergency session to vote to disaffiliate the University with IDA.

Speaking about the chances of USG passage of a bill against IDA, USG town congressman, Terry Klasky, said, "I can see USG supporting the idea of obtaining documents which will indicate whether IDA projects actually are on campus." He added that he foresees a USG demand for disaffiliation with IDA.

Collegian Wins First Class Rating

The Daily Collegian has been awarded a First Class rating by Associated Collegiate Press for Fall Term 1967.

The award, second highest given by ACP, was determined in competition with other daily collegiate newspapers. Collegian scored 3,510 out of a possible 3,800 points to win the honor. A score of 3,300 is necessary to qualify for the First Class Division.

ACP Critical Service rates each newspaper in three broad categories — coverage, content and physical properties. Each of these categories is further rated so that 24 separate divisions are evaluated.

U.S. Troops Sweep Saigon Outskirts

SAIGON — Under intense fire, U.S. troops swept into the southwestern outskirts of Saigon yesterday to head off enemy forces trying to break into the capital.

The U.S. Command said that since the enemy attack opened Sunday, 2,000 Viet Cong and North Vietnamese troops have been killed in what one officer called the enemy's "peace talk offensive."

In the far north, North Vietnamese rockets struck South Vietnamese installations at the big allied base of Da Nang and Quang Tri, but the enemy made no attempt to follow up with a ground attack.

This followed the pattern of the widespread attacks Sunday on more than 100 South Vietnamese cities and military installations. The allies believe the blows were intended to strengthen North Vietnam in talks in Paris this week, and they braced for more such attacks.

Pontiff To Attend Eucharistic Congress

VATICAN CITY — Pope Paul VI will fly to Latin America in August for his sixth trip aboard and history's longest journey by a pontiff of the Roman Catholic Church, 11,650 miles both ways.

The jet trip to a world Eucharistic Congress and a meeting of Latin-American bishops in Colombia will take a Pope for the first time to predominantly Catholic South America, a continent beset with social and religious upheaval.

The journey, planned to last two or three days, will serve to stress the Pope's concern with this upheaval and with strengthening the Church's message to the world of salvation through obedience to the teachings of Christ—the theme of the congress.

The trip comes against a background of concern over the health of the 70-year-old pontiff and of opposition by some Catholic groups in South America.

Kennedy Plans Repeat In Nebraska

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind. — Sen. Robert F. Kennedy, D-N.Y., is ready to duplicate in next Tuesday's Nebraska primary with the men, money and movement formula that landed him on top in Indiana's three-man, Democratic presidential contest.

But the outcome in Nebraska of his basic contest with Sen. Eugene J. McCarthy, D-Minn., could be less clearcut than the results of the massive effort which gave the New York senator 42 per cent of the Indiana Democratic vote.

President Johnson's name remains on the Nebraska ballot, despite his March 31 announcement that he would not accept renomination. Friends are working quietly to mount a write-in campaign for Vice President Hubert H. Humphrey.

In the Nebraska foray, to be concentrated in weekend rounds, Kennedy will carry with him the controversy over the money he is spending in an attempt to duplicate the primary sweep that helped his brother, the late John F. Kennedy, win the party nomination in 1960.

Pentagon Silent on Vietnam Infiltration

WASHINGTON — The Pentagon is remaining close-mouthed on how North Vietnam was able to infiltrate 80,000 to 100,000 troops into South Vietnam this year despite a $1 billion obstacle system below the DMZ.

Defense officials have apparently chosen to ignore all questions about the effectiveness of the anti-infiltration setup, announced last Sept. 7 by Robert S. McNamara, then secretary of defense.

McNamara ordered officials at the time not to discuss operational details which might help the enemy learn how to overcome the system.

But the Defense Department has extended this cloak of secrecy to cover such questions as how much tax money has been and will be spent on the barrier, and whether the system is having any discernable effect on infiltration.

Rescue Near for West Virginia Miners

HOMINY FALLS, W. Va. — The spirit of 15 coal miners, entombed since Monday in spaces that allow only a few to stand erect, remained high yesterday despite word that officials had been over-optimistic in predicting their imminent rescue.

C. E. Richardson, president of the company that owns the flooded mine, could not set a new target time. He said it probably would not be before Wednesday midnight. Officials had hoped to have the miners out early in the day. Confusion developed yesterday on the identities of the men trapped in three separate groups. No word has been received from the men farthest into the mine when waters from an adjoining mine poured in Monday. They are feared dead.

Company officials have not released a list of the men in each group, but said there were 10 two miles deep in the mountain, two at a point 1½ miles in, and 13 one mile from the mine entrance.

Raystown Dam Project Hotly Contested

WASHINGTON — A $4.5 million item in President Johnson's budget for the proposed Raystown dam and reservoir in central Pennsylvania was opposed and supported before a House Appropriations Subcommittee yesterday.

Support came from three members of the state's congressional delegation and a 60-member group from the area. Opposition forces were led by Gene Henry of Martinsburg. He estimated his group numbered about 50.

Henry said he objected to the project on the ground it would be mainly for recreation rather than for flood control.

Sen. Hugh Scott, R-Pa., who sided with the proponents as did Sen. Joseph D. Clark, D-Pa., and Rep. J. Irving Whalley, R-Pa., said the project offered the promise of a better life "for the people in this large area of Pennsylvania's Appalachian region."

Samuel A. Reimert, of Huntingdon, said the dam is unfeasible and impracticable and would be "a complete waste of the taxpayer's money at a time when our nation is practically bankrupt and we are conducting a costly Vietnam war."

Private, Parochial School Aid Approved

HARRISBURG — An historic bill that would authorize state financial aid to private and parochial schools was passed by the House yesterday over the opposition of the Republican leadership and in the face of a possible gubernatorial veto.

The roll call was 105-80, as proponents from both sides of the aisle joined to muster a constitutional majority with three votes to spare. The measure was sent to the Senate where it faces new administration attempts at amendment.

The bill, the first of its kind to be approved by either chamber, was strongly backed by the Pennsylvania Catholic Conference. An estimated 600,000 Catholic school children would be the major beneficiaries of the legislation.

Most Protestant and public education groups opposed the measure either on grounds that it was unconstitutional or that there was not enough money to finance adequately the state's public schools to divert funds to the nonpublic schools.

A Compromise

The catchwords of the preliminary negotiations between the United States and North Vietnam are patience and compromise. All members of both delegations must realize from the outset that the war cannot be won by either side, either on the battlefield or at the conference table.

The fact that the two antagonists are holding negotiations is a tacit admission that the war is a military stalemate and must be settled at the conference table if it can be settled at all.

Yet the North Vietnamese Foreign Minister, Xuan Thuy, who will lead Ho Chi Minh's delegation, spoke last week of giving the United States a "judo lesson" in Paris, meaning that he will try to catch the U.S. delegates off-balance and then force a concession.

The North Vietnamese press persists in telling its readers that the halt in the bombing of the North and the subsequent negotiations mean that the United States and its South Vietnamese "lackeys" have finally and inevitably been "defeated," and that the Paris conference precludes an end to American "imperialism."

United States officials, in turn, hope that the Communists will finally admit their "mistake" and will stop their "aggression" in the South. U.S. military officials in South Vietnam insist on predicting ultimate "victory" for the allies. Westmoreland still envisions victory around that bloody corner of his.

If both sides enter into negotiations with this attitude, the chances for peace in the near future are remote. If the talks degenerate into useless rhetoric about "aggression," "imperialism," and "victory," both the North Vietnamese and Americans will leave Paris in a huff, and our grandchildren may be fighting in Vietnam.

The essence of negotiation is compromise. As long as the United States and the Communists veil their true goals in abstract principles, no compromise is possible.

Hanoi has set as the first topic for discussion the "unconditional" cessation of bombing and other acts of war. The U.S. delegation must convince Xuan Thuy that the United States must provide air cover for its troops. A possible compromise on the issue might involve withdrawal of U.S. troops to defensive positions.

When and if talks begin with the specific goal of establishing a lasting peace, the two sides must again compromise. The most important questions to be settled are the eventual withdrawal of both U.S. and North Vietnamese troops from South Vietnam and the establishment of a viable, representative government in Saigon.

This means that the South Vietnamese government must participate in the Paris talks — whether it wants to or not — and must agree to the eventual forming of a coalition government. The National Liberation Front represents several million South Vietnamese people. The Viet Cong will never stop fighting unless they are given a voice in any future government.

Generals Thieu and Ky refuse to consider a coalition with the communists. They dragged Truong Dinh Dzu, the peace candidate in last year's elections, out of a Saigon hospital bed last week and carried him off to jail for just mentioning the idea in public.

If Thieu and Ky succeed in hampering peace talks and thus prolonging the war, the United States may have to take drastic action to change their minds. —M.S.S.

'Bedazzled' Irreverent, 'Stranger' Dedicated

By PAUL SEYDOR
Collegian Movie Critic

"Bedazzled," now at the Cinema II, is the most delightfully irreverent comedy since "The Loved One." For scriptwriter Peter Cook and director Stanley Donen ("Arabesque" and "Charade") nothing is sacred in this modern translation of the Faust legend.

The most memorable things are a hilarious spoof of Julie Andrews' Mary Poppins, a side-splitting show of the devil's mischief, and a pungent, blasphemous description of God and Heaven. (Asked what it's like up there, the devil answers, "We just used to sit around all day and adore Him.")

The ending of the film, by contrast with the sophisticated humor that precedes it, is disappointingly corny. The scriptwriter too easily, and rather sentimentally extricates the sympathetic hero from his plight. But never mind; that is a minor flaw in an otherwise riotous tour-de-force of sardonic spoofing.

A brief afterthought—not everyone will appreciate this parody at the expense of religion. After I remarked to one Penn State miss that I found the film quite funny, she replied, "You did? I thought it was the queerest, vulgarest thing I've ever seen!" Admittedly there is a tasteless scene that flirts with lesbianism in a nunnery.

Aside from that, however, "Bedazzled" is beyond reproach and priceless wicked. Besides, Stanley Donen finally manages something that has eluded any other director. That is, he puts Raquel Welch to good use. Her portrayal of Lust is a knock-out.

'The Stranger'

Albert Camus' "The Stranger" is given a superb and dedicated screen realization by the director-scriptwriter Luchino Visconti in his new film of the same title, now at the Cathaum through tonight.

The story is about a Frenchman, Meursault, for whom the world is meaningless, absurd. He finds authenticity only in the daily rituals of his job and of his evening meals at a cheap cafe. Reality is the cigarette he smokes at the moment, the coffee he drinks, the girl to whom he makes love. He does nothing more than accept the world as he sees it, allowing it to move him along whatever course it chooses.

Eventually it begins to close in on him, squeezing him in a stifling grip that ultimately forces him to commit an apparently motiveless and senseless murder. And, of course, for him the act is senseless, because there can be no sense in an absurd world. He kills the man because "the sun was too hot," because at that moment the world offered nothing else.

By paying careful attention to the composition of scenes, Visconti skillfully suggests Meursault's claustrophobic world. At one point, for example, there is a shot of the sky bordered on the left and right of the screen by rows of trees. Several times the camera catches Meursault standing in a doorway, hemmed in by the railings of his balcony, peering through the banisters of the stairway leading to his room, completely engulfed by a malevolent darkness. These images also serve to indicate his alienation from other persons, thus, the double bars separating him from Marie at the prison.

Visconti remains faithful to Camus's novel almost to the letter. Virtually everything from the poignant old man and his diseased dog to Meursault's pimp-friend to the ineffectual priest is preserved intact with the power and force of the book. There is only one major change, which is in structure.

Interrogation Scene

Visconti opens the film with Meursault's interrogation. Visconti then cuts to the novel's beginning, making everything that leads up to the murder and the crime itself a long flashback. This change allows Visconti to use close-up shots to point out the little things which Meursault recalls with pleasure and which are real to him. When we first encounter Marie, for instance, the camera zooms in for a close-up as her hair blows across her face, anticipating Meursault's reply to the priest, "All your certainties aren't worth one strand of girl's hair!"

Though the film is very low-key throughout and its pace is slow and deliberate, Visconti avoids tediousness (even as he suggests it in Meursault's life) by varying the dynamics of his direction. The photography, for instance, momentarily blurs as Meursault awakes on Sunday, the most difficult day for him to get through (because, of course, his rituals are broken).

Builds, Relieves Tension

When Meursault is especially aware of his threatening world, Visconti builds the tension by focusing on dirty walls of rooms, glaring lights, and sharp contrasts of light and dark. When Meursault is more at ease—as in the love scenes with Marie—the camera relieves the tension by dissolving the enclosure business, softening the contrasts, and slightly blurring, thereby mellowing, the photography.

Not everything in the film is on an equal plane of excellence. The trial drags on too long, as Visconti goes a bit haywire in a hodge-podge of zoom and pan shots. There is some clumsy editing. The English dubbing is often far out of time with the spoken French.

But these flaws are lost in the magnitude of this film's achievement. Aided by a fine cast, notably Marcello Mastroianni in a deftly under-played lead performance, Visconti has succeeded in brilliantly evoking the peculiar kind of existential world that Meursault makes for himself: a world seen through an open door, a window, the bars of a prison—the metaphor of his life.

Letters to the Collegian Editor

If It Ain't White, It Ain't . . .

TO THE EDITOR: As a member of Penn State's black community and the Douglas Association, I was highly disturbed by the logic or should I say the illogic of Mr. Englander in his letter of May 7. In this letter I do not intend to discuss his illogical conclusions about the Douglas Association but I wish to discuss Mr. Englander's reasons for being disturbed about the production "A Day In The Life."

It appears that Mr. Englander is another brain-washed white individual who believes "if it ain't white, it ain't right," his objection of the exclusive use of black authors and black performers seems to uphold his white-right belief.

The name of the production is "A Day In The Life" not "White American Literature in Review As Performed By The Inmates of The White Power Structure." That is to say, it is a production showing the life of my people, not your people. It is "A Day In The Life Of The Black Experience." With such a theme how do you expect us to effectively express our experience without using black authors? Can John Steinbeck describe urban black ghetto living better than Claude Brown? Can Faulkner? Can Michener or Kafka?

In regards to the use of black performers it does imply that only black people can interpret black authors correctly. Claude Brown, Leroy Jones, and Ralph Ellison write about black people; their experiences make the chapters of Brown, Jones, and Ellison. Would it not seem logical that black people are the best qualified to perform their works on stage? Surely you cannot perform the works of black authors as well as a black man?

Finally, your letter expressed a lack of understanding of the University's action in allowing such a production to be performed on its premises. If more shows like "A Day In The Life" were allowed to appear in Happy Valley, perhaps you would understand what it means to be black in white America. You also stated that the show was nothing but the fostering agent for hatred. To that I say if you saw only hate in the show then you entered with only hate on your mind.

Black and White Apathy

TO THE EDITOR: I read with interest the Collegian's recent announcements of a discussion to be led by Dr. Foreman titled "Race Confronts the University: The Student's Role." After attending this informative discussion I am better aware of two ideas:

First, the attendance of approximately 12 students lends support to the suspected notion that the Penn State student body is overwhelmingly apathetic. However, so what? Apathy isn't news at Dear Old State.

Second, and I believe far more important, is the fact that no Negro students were among the participants at the discussion. Dr. Foreman explained that black students don't want white involvement in black affairs. Yet the black student, by disregarding this opportunity to discuss and perhaps activate a confrontation with the University over problems of race, is lessening his opportunity to improve his isolated status at the University.

It is certainly true that the Negro at Penn State is isolated, but he could take a step toward alleviating this condition by working with the white. "Columbia could never happen here"—because of apathetic attitudes both white AND black.

'Blackie' in the Backyard?

TO THE EDITOR: It used to be just the whites, remember? Remember when all the bigotry, cruelty, apathy and hate emanated from just the white radicals? Remember how the whites always made the empty promises of racial equality and eased racial tensions in our land? It's been going on so sickeningly long that I don't see how anyone could ever forget it! One tends to wonder when it will all end. If indeed it ever will.

But for all the years Whitley has taken a stiff price from the Negro, Blackie, in just two short summers, has done all but reimburse himself with interest. It is no shocking news that the American Negro is fed up. He is evidently tired of being cheated, evicted and unjustly accused. He's been socially, verbally, physically and, at times, insanely mistreated by his "fellow American." So now it's time for the black man to take charge, right? From now on all whites will pay for the injustices and atrocities committed by the ignorant majority . . . right?

Just look around, my friend. A few weeks ago, during CHOICE '68, a student group for Robert Kennedy posted a sign in the HUB basement which read: "Black control of a black community." Not too long before that Howard University erupted in a show of black power that started off a wave of student protesting all over the country.

Last week during the Columbia University rioting a SNCC demonstrator warned, "the black community is taking over!" How much clearer can it be? The troops are rallying right before our eyes! They say that blood is thicker than water—it also leaves a nasty smelling stain.

Summer is almost upon us, folks. Where will you have your good time? At the shore . . . Florida Las Vegas . . . where? Blackie is going to have his in your backyard. He has learned to take what he wants; and what he wants is black control of a black nation with one blackness under one black God granting freedom and licorice for all — who are black.

Wise up, People. Interest rates have risen and payment is long overdue.

Withdrawal Worst War Crime

TO THE EDITOR: On May 10 anti-war groups on this campus will again call for the immediate withdrawal of American troops from Vietnam. As co-chairmen of the Committee for Peace through Victory, we would also like to see the day when the last troops are brought home, when the last American base is abandoned, and when permanent peace is restored. However, we feel that any further concession of Vietnamese territory would be a senseless error, for the following reasons:

(1) Having gained from their aggression, the Communists would realize that brushfire warfare pays off. Their next move would be to launch another attack, perhaps in Thailand. American troops would again be drawn into the fighting, and we would again be faced with another Asian guerilla war, and another, and another, until all of Southeast Asia fell into Communist hands. However, once beaten at their own game, as in Malaya in the 1950's, they become quite wary of another attack.

(2) While no one but the Johnson administration is singing the praises of the South Vietnamese government, we need only to glance back a few years to find out how it compares with the Communist government in terms of popularity. When the people of Vietnam were given a choice of living in either half of Vietnam after the ceasefire in 1954, an overwhelming majority of those who chose to move fled south. Today, no one is fleeing north to escape the "American oppressors."

(3) Finally, judging by the recent slaughter of hundreds of innocent civilians in Hue during the recent Communist occupation, the surrender of Vietnam to Communist control would probably result in an unparalleled bloodbath. To allow this would be the worst "war crime" we could commit.

Male-Female Ratio Right

TO THE EDITOR: Much has been said recently about the discrimination against women in the University's admission policy. However, no one has said why such discrimination is practiced.

The practice is an outcome of one of the main reasons why any state university is established, i.e., to provide professional employees for existing industries in the state and to entice new industries to come into the state by virtue of the state's resources, one of which is its supply of professional people. (Incidentally, for this same reason, admission preference is given to state residents and out-of-staters are discriminated against.)

Note that most engineering, scientific, and business firms in this country are located in the Middle Atlantic and New England states. One of the main reasons that the universities and colleges of New York, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, and Massachusetts produce the majority of best qualified engineers, scientists, and business people in the country.

To entice such industries into their own state, most of the state universities in the South and the West observe male-female admission ratios much higher than PSU's low 2.5:1 ratio.

Most of the women at any state university are in Human Development, Liberal Arts and Education. Most of the men are in Engineering, Science, and Business. Every woman that is admitted takes away the opportunity from a man to become a qualified professional working in an industry in his home state to earn a living and support his family.

Although women grads can also find jobs in industry, it is a well established fact that the majority of them come to college mainly to get a husband. However, if they do go into industry, it is usually only a short time before they marry and leave to raise a family. A man even after he marries stays in industry.

So let's put a stop to all this foolish talk about the admission discrimination policy against women. There is a very good reason for its existence and the women at this institution should consider themselves lucky that PSU has such a low M:F ratio.

Fairness in Ticket Sales

TO THE EDITOR: The sign said "Simon and Garfunkel in Concert, Tickets $2.50," which all sounds very nice and reasonable.

In the fine print it should have read: "$50 investment required to assure availability of tickets." U.S.G. runs their concerts supposedly for the entertainment of students in this isolated university of ours. Supposedly profit is a secondary motive. Yet so many of us couldn't get tickets because we were unable to come up with the ridiculous sums of money with which to pay scalpers' prices or to buy an entire block of twenty—to secure just two seats.

Why is it that things are run so unfairly that one student was able to win fifty tickets in a poker game and then re-sell them at $5 a piece? Why is it that after waiting in line for two hours, students were told that all tickets were sold out and were then approached by scalpers holding handfuls of tickets going for $10 a piece?

Couldn't sales be conducted in a more discriminatory manner?

I suggest to U.S.G. that there be stricter regulations set up. Students buying block tickets should have proof that they are representing a bona fide group (by presenting lists of names, filling out a form, etc.). No one student should be permitted to buy more than four tickets for himself (without proof of group representation).

Penn State has so little exciting entertainment available. I'd like to think that the student government would be interested in assuring access to concerts to as many students as possible—at a fair price.

Worthless Criticism Award

TO THE EDITOR: The most worthless kind of criticism is that which is uninformed, biased, and done just for the sake of criticizing someone or something. With due regard to the above, I nominate your editorial on "Fraternalities" for the "most worthless criticism" of the year award.

Seriously, we recognize that one of the favorite pastimes at Penn State is criticizing the Greeks, but don't you think it is overdue? You say that all Greek life has to offer is "drinking and free sex." Well, you have conveniently neglected the academic aspects. May I remind you that the sorority average has consistently been the highest on this campus. Also, the fraternity average last term was higher than the All-University Men's average. Also, the Presidents of Alpha Lambda Delta, Chi Omega, Mortar Board, and Sorority (the women's honoraries on this campus) are all sorority women.

As far as campus leadership is concerned, the Greeks are very involved in this aspect of Penn State. Have you forgotten, or don't you want to admit that sorority women are the Presidents of WRA, AWS, AWS Review Boards, Co-Chairmen of Orientation, and Editor of the "Penn State Woman"? These are just to name a few Greek leaders. Pretty good for "tipsy women," eh?

You maintain that certain aspects of fraternity life are outdated. We agree. I maintain that certain aspects of Penn State life are outdated and overworked, namely criticizing the Greek System inaccurately and at times, unjustly. We are adapting our system to bring it into harmony with today's college life — now what are you doing about yours?

Out with the Old, And in with the New?

By ALAN SLUTSKIN
Collegian Drama Critic

The extensive revamping of the Theatre Department showed glaringly in the opening performance of "The Servant Of Two Masters" in the Pavilion Theatre. The director, Robert D. Reifsnider, is a remnant of what used to be typical of University theatre.

It is a difficult task to assemble a faculty capable of producing polished, professional presentations, and, at the same time, function as instructors to many not so professional students. For this reason, the Department cannot always employ specialists. However, a quick look at the faculty reveals an obvious trend developing among its fresh members.

Mark Bertram is a playwright teaching playwrighting, and the intensified productivity of the "5 O'clock Theatre" this year is far from coincidental. Richard Shank is a director teaching directing and managing to inject some hope of what University Theatre might some day become by offering such electrifying involvements into the modern theatre as "Marat/Sade."

'New Generation'

Some of the senior members of the department fit right into this "new generation" that seems to be gaining ground. Lowell Manfull by comparison, seems to be the staunch traditionalist, but his fairly recent productions of "Under Milk Wood" and "The Ghost Sonata" have revealed the keen eloquence of the technician along with the exciting creativity that gives that "old script" new life.

Rounding out the team is Kelly Yeaton, a name that seems to be quoted in everything ever printed about central staging. Yeaton, not so incidentally, is presently engaged in conducting an experimental theatre workshop.

It seems that the many pieces of this puzzle could add up to an exciting future for Penn State theatre. Then, suddenly out of the clandestine background comes the final ingredient that could provide cohesiveness to the struggle, only it turns out to be the proverbial square peg in the round hole. Two years ago Reifsnider tried to revive "Lute Song," a very old, very bad play, and ended up with a catastrophe. This year, with "The Servant Of Two Masters," he has escaped the same disastrous results only because of a magnificent performance by Paul Villani and some lines in the script that would even by funny if delivered by Tiny Tim.

As Pantalone, Villani incorporated the mastering of body control, verbal modulation, facial expression and character interaction into the finest performance given in the Pavilion since Joseph Medall's rendition of "The Queen And The Rebels." Villani reached an incredible plateau in his attempt to work for age and was, indeed, the only character who appeared believable.

Steve Hubickak, as Truffaldino, came through with some fine lazzi, or bits of comedy that find their origin in the Comedia dell'Arte, and served as the single element to lend any remnant of pacing or tempo to this production. Ed Poling as Silvio, Kathryn Bredbenner as Clarice, and Karen Shallo as Beatrice managed to appear on stage, as Kenneth Tynan the British drama critic once put it "like the lions waiting for someone to throw them a fish." Poling, though, stood high above the rest as he muttered lines, lost all instinct for timing, and hobbled across the boards like a wounded turkey.

Two Adequate Performances

Victor Van Etten as Florindo and John Orlock as Dr. Lombardi delivered adequate performances and came closest to achieving Villani's degree of credibility. Bob Barber as the first porter, complemented Hubickak's comical contribution, but was overshadowed by an unbelievably horrendous performance by Roy Laird who portrayed the waiter, Tom Lynch as Brigella, and Carol Corven as Smeraldina, rounded out the ineptitude of the supporting cast.

Miss Corven merely displayed her inexperience by jumping on quies and making it obvious that she was waiting for them, but Lynch was so far out of character that each time that he opened his mouth the mere physical act forecasted impending self-destruction.

Director Must Provide Creativity

It is not simply that the limited nature of a play such as "The Servant Of Two Masters" is a disappointing retrogression following directly upon the footsteps of such an exploration into total theatre as "Marat/Sade." The freedom of interpretation provided by a piece which derives its characterizations from the Comedia is boundless.

The creativity, however, must be provided by the director. He can draw the most from the inexperienced, he can instill rhythm into movement, and he can provide the nourishment that is the essence of life for a production. At its christening, "The Servant Of Two Masters" died.

Clothesline Art Sale Set for S. Allen St.

Arts Festival Moves Downtown

By DENNIS STIMELING
Collegian Staff Writer

The Spring Arts Festival continues into its fifth and longest day today as the festival events change location from the University campus to downtown State College. S. Allen St. will be the site for most of today's festivities as the downtown merchants welcome the festival. Today's events will begin with the first showing of a three-day clothesline art sale on S. Allen St. This art exhibit is open to any student who wishes to sell or exhibit his work. The sale will continue until Saturday.

The theme of the arts festival, "Creative Man: a Language of his Soul," will be the mainstay of today's events.

Tim Hare, festival chairman, said today's activities will probably be the most significant for the theme because "the student can actually participate in the construction and design aspects of the S. Allen St. Mall."

This construction will begin this afternoon at 2:20. Hare invited all students to join in with the construction of the festival's symbol.

There will be another event at 12:30 p.m. where students will be given an opportunity to express their creative natures. This is the sidewalk and car painting in which S. Allen St. itself will be painted. As in the construction of the festival symbol, all materials for this project will be given to student volunteers free of charge.

"Dadaism," the underlying concept of the Spring Arts Festival, will not be forgotten today. The dadaism booth at the Hetzel Union Building will be open again, along with the antics of Hare and other members of the festival committee.

The festival has been a "great success," Hare said. The only problem the committee has encountered was the mysterious removal Monday of the twenty "dadaism" sculptures which had been placed at various points around the campus.

This afternoon, in addition to the construction of "the happening", there will be a concert by the New Dimension String Band on the S. Allen St. Mall.

Tonight there will be two concerts on the festival agenda. The first, beginning at 7 p.m., is a hootenanny on the S. Allen St. Mall sponsored by the Folklore Society. The second is by the Jazz Spokesmen at 9 p.m. in the Hammond Exhibition Area.

Modern Dance at White Hall Studio
A concert of another nature will be held in the White Hall Dance Studio at 8 p.m. A modern dance exhibition, it is sponsored by the Modern Dance Club.

This wide variety of concerts, in most cases overlapping in time, is because "the festival should have something that every student will like and participate in," Hare said.

Today is the most important time of the festival for students to express their concept of art, according to Hare. Today's participatory events are the largest and most ambitious of the entire festival. Without student participation they cannot succeed.

"The future of the festival depends to a large degree on the intensity of student participation in today's projects," Hare said. "The students must take part in order to make this festival a success."

Walker Outlines Views On Future Universities

University President Eric A. Walker outlined his visions of "the university of the future" at the Faculty Women's Club yesterday.

He also told the women attending the annual luncheon in the Hetzel Union Building that wherever new educational techniques are tried, students seem to be enthusiastic.

"Perhaps what our restless students really need is responsibility for their own education — something to fire their ambition and channel their enthusiasm in the right direction," he said.

"Perhaps what they need is not to be taught but to be shown how to learn. Perhaps if we accepted them as individuals, and worked with them as human beings, we would find them a lot more eager to accept the real responsibilities of college and of life," he added.

The university that Walker projected in his talk has no prescribed curricula, no standardized courses, no large classrooms which must be filled, and no professors who would lecture three times a week and occasionally be available for students.

One Student, One Professor

With the university on a tutorial basis, each student, when he first appears on the campus, would be assigned to a professor. The professor would be called his tutor, or mentor, as long as the student had an interest in the professor and the professor in the student, Walker explained.

"It would be well, of course, for a student who had already decided to go into science to have a professor who knew something about science and was interested in science students," Walker said, adding that the same would apply in other fields of study.

The students would meet with the professor at least once a week and the two would decide together what examinations the student should take, and when he would be ready to receive his degree.

The student would be required to take certain courses but a course would not consist of a group of students meeting to hear a lecture three times a week. It would consist of a syllabus or outline of what the student needed to know and understand.

"This might include textbooks, film strips, video tape recordings, and so on, culminating in an examination which would be set by the professor," Walker said.

"But the rate at which the student proceeded through the syllabus would be up to the student. He could cover the whole course in a week if he wished or he could spread it out over a year. The examination would be fairly standard and would be given and graded by the professor or one of his assistants," he said.

Assistants

An assistant would be available by appointment to help the student over rough spots and explain objectives of lecture once in a while if he felt it was necessary. But attendance would not be mandatory nor would attendance be limited to students registered in the course. And, obviously, if these public lectures were good enough, they would end up on video tape anyway so that the student could hear them at time other than when they are actually given," Walker said.

The student needs a place to work to study and to learn, Walker pointed out. The materials he needs to study are mostly his own mind, the syllabus, the tape recordings, and books, he added.

Every student could have an assigned cubicle for his study. This could be in a library or in a laboratory or just his own room, he said.

"But," Walker emphasized, "it would have to be his own private place not shared with anyone else."

Easy Access

One requirement would be easy access to recordings, tapes, and books, a telephone line through which he could select and listen to tape recordings of lectures and, possibly, a television connection through which he could cut into lectures being given live or stored in the files of the library.

"It is obvious that this can be done by our modern communications and computer methods and of course, everything should be available 24 hours a day, seven days a week, to accommodate the peculiar study habits of students, some who seem to prefer doing most of their work between 12 midnight and 6 a.m.," Walker said.

A university such as this, Walker said, would overcome some of the shortcomings in higher education—shortcomings such as impersonality, continuation of a nine month year, a credit system, lectures of 30 minutes, 50 minutes, or 75 minutes, the lecture itself which sometimes "is transferred from the notebook of the lecturer to the notebook of the student without leaving much impression," lectures which could be in texts, scheduling problems, classrooms of certain sizes at certain times, and the very matter of schedules themselves.

In defense of today's university, Walker said he felt that universities in general have done a "tremendous job" in meeting the demands placed on them by a rapidly growing number of students and in an era when there is an increase in the amount of new information being developed.

the course as well as to provide personal tutorial work when needed.

As to the professor's responsibility, Walker sees his job as one where he would "write out clearly and concisely what the objectives of the course are and what the student needs to know to pass."

"This would include outlining the syllabus, the selection of textbooks, the taping of lectures, the video-taping of illustrative material, and finally the setting of the exams," he explained.

If the course were to consist largely of television tape recordings, team effort might be used by the professor and his colleagues to prepare the tapes.

"There would be nothing wrong with a professor giving a public, live

right under your nose Festival, Dramas, Concerts Fill Mother's Day Weekend

By NANCY SPENCE
Collegian Staff Writer

Tomorrow the Arts Festival continues in full swing. The "clothesline" is still "hangin' in there" exposing your art work to sun, breeze and admiring gazes. To vent your artistic (or delinquent) tendencies, a car will be provided for the swish of brush and paint. Then, there'll be a concert, and oil, watercolor, and ceramic demonstrations. All these are planned as daytime activities.

Tomorrow night "The Other Mothers" will provide music for mothers and others in the "Mothers Other Day" jammy. In other words, there's a jammy in the Findlay Union Building from 9 p.m. to 12:30 a.m. If you're a mother, admission is free. If you're not a mother, but Mom accompanies you, you're both admitted free. Girls, (future mothers, of course), will be admitted free, also, until 9:30. The rest must pay the price, 25 cents.

They say the Mighty Quinn and Mack the Knife are no match for "The Hunchback of Notre Dame." He comes to campus tomorrow for two appearances in the Hetzel Union Building, at 7 and 9:15 p.m., compliments of Nickelodeon Nites. Tomorrow and Saturday evening will be "tonights" (a poor Collegian pun) of music, dance, and romance in "West Side Story." The switchblade gangs will begin "dancin' in the streets" at 8 p.m. in Schwab.

"Wild Side"

If the west side doesn't interest you, perhaps the wild side would. "Walk on the Wild Side" will be shown in the FUB Saturday night at 7:30 and 10. Tomorrow night at 8 the Orchestral Club will perform student-choreographed primitive, contemporary, and avant-garde dances at the dance studio of White Building.

"Anonymous" once said something to the effect that hope is wisdom. Hope is also the name of a hospital ship, and for its benefit the "New Emperors" are sponsoring a jammy and concert, tomorrow. This will be held in the HUB from 8:30 to the witching hour.

Curtainless Theatre
In the campus theatre-in-the-round, the Pavilion Theatre, "The Servant of Two Masters" will continue performances tomorrow and Saturday. Curtain time for the curtainless theatre is 8 p.m.

Alan Ladd and "the man who came to dinner" are stars in "All the Young Men!" to be shown for 25 cents worth of encouragement in Waring Lounge at 6 p.m. Saturday.

The man to whom they told "hang down your head" will be the topic for the student film Saturday at 7 and 9:30 p.m. and Sunday at 8 and 8:30 p.m. "The Legend of Tom Dooley" will be shown in the HUB.

Glee Club

Sunday at 3:30 p.m. in Schwab the Penn State Glee Club will present "Bossa Nova 1968" featuring selections from "Carmen."

If no one has given you a lecture lately, try Room 102 Forum at 8 p.m. where H. D. Lasswell will present "The Policy Sciences after 20 years."

Then Monday, a real live policy scientist, Daddario, chairman of the House Subcommittee on Science, Research and Development, will speak in Schwab at 8 p.m. Tickets are available at the HUB.

Senate Action Urged On USG Discipline Bill

Jeffrey Polaski, student representative on the Senate Committee for Undergraduate Student Affairs, said last night he hopes that the Senate acts by June on the Undergraduate Student Government's bill concerning a student's right to have an adviser with him at all disciplinary meetings with the Administration.

Polaski said that it is impossible at this time to predict what action the Senate will take when the committee presents the bill on the floor.

When he spoke to the Senate Tuesday, he was "surprised" by the good reception the bill seemed to get from the senators.

Polaski said he has no worries about the integrity of the administration and staff, but this bill needs pushing because there is no specific right now granted to the students concerning advisers at hearings. Whether a student may be accompanied by an adviser is now up to each individual hearing committee.

The primary concern of the senators seems to be whether the presence of advisers will upset the counselling process. He said when a student gets into trouble and an investigation begins often the case results in counselling rather than discipline.

USG is seeking the adviser right for students in all disciplinary settings, but Polaski said advisers are most needed in the Campus Patrol and Campus Security investigations. If no other rights are granted to students going into disciplinary settings, Polaski said he will insist on the adviser right for Campus Patrol and Security hearings.

He said it is especially necessary here because the Campus Patrol and Security are staffed mainly by non-professionals.

Mr. Galvin:

business is an institution...not a force for social change

Dear Mr. Galvin:

The issues have been many—recruiting, blue collar training, the war. And yet "what we have here is a failure to communicate." We have both presented indirectly our philosophies—the businessman and the student. Yet neither of our philosophies are representative. You are not the average businessman and I am not the average student. It is far fetched to assume that any individual student would make business a career because he enjoys what you say or because he agrees with you. It is equally improbable that any student would reject a business career because of a disagreement or dislike for what has been discussed during the dialogue.

Students are disenchanted with business only superficially because of its "systemness." They seem more concerned with the real desperation which they recognize in our society. And subsequently vocations and careers which can alleviate some of this desperation. Business is not this type of career. It is an institution to students, not a force for social change, adjusting pressures in our society.

Business, as indicated through this dialogue, is becoming a social force but it has just begun. Through the public service of this dialogue, Mr. Galvin, you have just scratched the surface of student opinion. Our disagreement is not over your interest in social problems, but over your degree of interest.

When business becomes a positive social force equal to its stature and influence in our society, students will listen and communicate. But this communication will only occur through business action.

Thank you for your time and interest in students. It does not go unappreciated.

Sincerely,

Barbara A. Caulfield

Barbara A. Caulfield

Dear Miss Caulfield:

When we consider the involvement of business in social problems, please remember we are talking about business people. The business programs to which I have previously drawn your attention that help combat air and water pollution, train and employ "unemployables", and help solve other social problems, are conceived, developed, and implemented by people in business—many of them recent college graduates.

Opportunities for graduates to participate in direct, meaningful, and effective action to alleviate social problems exist now in businesses varying from banking to steel mills, from transportation to oil refining, from manufacturing to insurance, and almost every type of commercial endeavor.

Business must be involved for its own survival, and it is—far more than is generally realized. When one sees a social problem that a certain business does not seem concerned with, one frequently overlooks other problems that it is working on. Then again, businesses frequently work behind the scenes in the prevention of what could become social problems.

However, it is impossible to weigh business' involvement in social problems against its importance and influence in our society. Some companies seem to return to the community a fair portion of the benefits they receive from it; others do not, and it is my hope that this ratio will change as more businessmen recognize their responsibilities and obligations to society.

You have expressed the thought that neither of us are average . . . however, from letters I have received concerning our dialogue, I know the viewpoints and philosophies we have each expressed are shared by a great many other students and businessmen. I do not feel that my views are far removed from those of most business leaders today; likewise, a great many students share your views.

As you point out, Barbara, in the final analysis action on the part of the business world is our best method of communicating with college students and with the community at large. And more businessmen must find ways of acquainting the campus community with the types of action they are taking and of their dreams and plans for the future.

Sincerely,

Robert W. Galvin

BRIDGING THE GENERATION GAP. Concerned about campus viewpoints on business, and equally concerned that businessmen often have misimpressions of today's college students, Robert W. Galvin, Motorola Chairman, is participating in a continuing dialogue with students at four leading universities. The students, whose letters to Mr. Galvin are being published in campus papers together with his replies, are: Barbara Caulfield, Northwestern University; Ralph Kimball, Stanford University; Paul George Sittenfeld, Princeton University; and Fred Sayre, University of Arizona. Additional topics are being aired over college radio stations. Mr. Galvin also has visited campuses to participate in discussions aimed at furthering mutual respect and understanding. ## Three Battle for Second Spot

Burkhart Chosen to Fill QB's Shoes

By RON KOLB

Collegian Sports Editor

(Sixth in a series of articles analyzing the 1968 Penn State football team during spring drills. Today's topic—the quarterback.)

Joe Paterno needed someone to carry out his plans. The Pidgeon got the call.

"Our spring drills will be geared toward finding a quarterback," head football coach Paterno had said four weeks ago when it all began. He had an objective, a mission to find Tom Sherman's replacement behind the center.

Each day on the ice pavilion field, even before practice officially began, he'd alternate the quarterback hopefuls, each one taking his turn throwing the football at a colored patch on a fish net. Backfield coach George Welsh would time each player, from the moment he took the snap to the moment he released the ball.

Then Paterno would blow the whistle and herd the quarterbacks to one end of the field, lining them up, each behind his own center. They'd practice handoffs, dropbacks roll-outs, sneaks and pass patterns. Paterno would walk back and forth, pointing out the good points, eliminating the bad.

At the end of one week, Paterno said, "Chuckie Burkhart still is the man to beat." After two weeks, he said, "Chuckie's doing a fine job. He's number one right now." After three weeks, he repeated, "Chuck's still the starter." And yesterday, Paterno said, "Chuck will be our quarterback."

The Pidgeon, or "Pidg" as his teammates call him, proceeded with a quiet confidence throughout the drills. Since he had been Sherman's backup man last year, he knew the offense better than his competitors. And he knew that he knew more. Thus the confidence.

Burkhart is a 6-0, 185-pounder from McKees Rocks who played high school ball under Lion end coach Bob Phillips at Montour. The same coach and school produced All-American Ted Kwalick, who will be catching passes again this season, probably from Burkhart.

"Chuck has done well, and he's improving all the time," Paterno said. "He's getting better every day and I'm sure he'll be all right."

Fans were generally skeptical that the former Big 33 quarterback could get the job done. Last season he only threw 21 passes, completing just six for 101 yards. Besides, he had gained but 32 yards in 20 attempts on the ground, the totals including the times he had to look up from beneath the rubble of opposing linemen. The offense never seemed to go.

Now things may be different. He's got a first team to work with. He's got a jump on the younger quarterback hopefuls. He's got the moral backing of his teammates. And he's got the confidence he has to have.

"He's got good poise, and he thinks well under fire," Paterno said of his starter. "He'll have to do things a little quicker, and he'll have to react quicker to situations. But all that, along with a stronger arm, will come in time. Chuck can run the team well, and as soon as he develops a tempo and a pace, I'm sure he'll be fine."

Though the top spot is fairly definite, the backup quarterback spot is still wide open. Burkhart's roommate, junior Wally Cirafesi (6-2, 183), and Mike Cooper (6-0, 185), a sophomore, have been battling through spring drills for the position. Terry Stump (6-1, 190), another soph, has been moved to the defensive backfield, but he may return to quarterback if necessary.

A third newcomer from last year's freshman team, Jim Colbert, just recently returned to the squad after sitting out a couple of weeks because of disciplinary action. If he can make up for the time he's missed, he'll also stand a good chance for the number two spot.

As for the rest of the team, Paterno still has his biggest problem.

"It's been a discouraging spring," he said, "because we can't get those people together that we need. So many young players have been injured, and all at spots where we had hoped we wouldn't have any trouble."

Those spots that are so critical include the offensive backfield and offensive guards. Right now five young backfield prospects are on the shelf, along with two linemen, all who need all the experience they can get.

The hospital list includes fullback Fran Ganter (5-11, 194, broken ribs), halfback Jim McCord (6-2, 200, broken clavicle), halfback Charlie Adams (6-0, 195, knee), fullback George Landis (6-0, 185, thigh) and halfback Gary Deuel (6-0, 185, knee). The latter two were added to the list just during the past week. All five are first-year sophomores.

Two More Out

In addition, guards Bob Holuba (6-3, 215) and Charlie Zapiec (6-1, 205), a pair of good first-year prospects, may also miss the rest of spring drills because of injuries.

"We just haven't made the progress where I thought we had to — on offense," Paterno said.

Switching to defense, two major changes have been made over the past week or two. Jack Ham, a 6-2, 205-pound soph from Johnstown, has moved into a first-team outside linebacker spot. And Mike Smith, (5-11, 180) another soph from Annville, has slipped into a defensive halfback slot, replacing Orlando Moncelis.

"But don't count Lonnie out," Paterno added. "He's coming on strong."

It's true, Paterno's still got some disheartening problems to overcome before he can settle back and enjoy next season's schedule. He must get half a dozen backfield replacements healthy enough to be taught what's going on. And he has to work on the fine points a team must develop to be a major contender.

But in one area, the pressure's off. The Pidgeon couldn't be happier.

Hunter Spins Perfect Game

OAKLAND, Calif. (AP) — Jim Hunter pitched a perfect game — only the ninth in modern major league baseball history — as the Oakland Athletics defeated the Minnesota Twins 4-0 last night.

The 22-year-old right-hander, in his fourth season in the majors, set down all 27 batters he faced, striking out 11 of them. He also drove in three of Oakland's runs with two singles. Hunter's gem was the first in the majors since Sandy Koufax of the Los Angeles Dodgers accomplished the feat three years ago in the National League.

The perfect game was the first by an American League pitcher since Don Larsen pitched one in the 1955 World Series. But it had been 46 years since Charlie Robertson of the Chicago White Sox pitched a perfect game in a regular season American League contest.

Tom Phoebus of Baltimore pitched a no-hitter earlier this season, but it was not a perfect game.

Hunter entered the game with a 32-38 record in the major leagues and raised his record this season to 3-2 with the victory.

Trainer Stays, Preakness Next

BOSTON (AP) — Owner Peter Fuller said yesterday that after a couple of mix-ups, he has been told that trainer Lou Cavalariis can continue to handle Dancer's Image and on that basis he plans to run the disqualified Kentucky Derby winner in the Preakness May 18.

The wealthy automobile dealer repeated his insistence, however, that if Cavalariis for any reason is prohibited from saddling the 3-year-old colt, Dancer's Image will not run in the $150,000-added second jewel in racing's Triple Crown.

"He's innocent of any wrongdoing—he's a legitimate person," Fuller said in an interview. "He'll either go into the paddock with me and my wife on May 18 or the horse won't run. They're an indivisible team. They're both champions."

Fuller said a hearing is scheduled at Churchill Downs next week into the disqualification of Dancer's Image because of a pain-killing drug found in the colt's system after last Saturday's Derby.

Fuller said his understanding now is that Cavalariis may train the horse, pending the outcome of the hearing, but wouldn't be able to saddle him for a race unless he is exonerated.

Asked what he would do if the case should still be pending, he said:

"I don't believe it will still be pending, but if that should happen and Cavalariis can't saddle the horse, he won't run."

The mix-up occurred earlier in the day when Fuller announced that he had received word that Cavalariis couldn't train the horse. He said then that he was therefore withdrawing the colt from the race and having him shipped back to his Runnymede farm at North Hampton, N.H.

Within the hour, Maryland Jockey Club officials denied the report and announced that Dancer's Image could remain at Pimlico.

Dancer's Image won the Derby last Saturday by 2 1/2 lengths but was disqualified and placed last on Tuesday after traces of the pain-killing drug phenylbutazone were found in a post-race urinalysis.

Kentucky racing commissioners will conduct a hearing Monday to seek additional facts. Fuller has leveled charges of possible tampering with his gray colt.

Rubin Says Pipers Stay In Pittsburgh

PITTSBURGH (AP) — The Pittsburgh Pipers, American Basketball Association champs, would not be moved to New York, Piper owner Gabe Rubin said in a statement yesterday.

Hoever, the statement said Rubin "has received attractive invitations from other cities to move the Pipers."

Reports that Rubin was trying to move the club into New York prompted a jurisdiction dispute between him and Arthur Brown, owner of the ABA's annual meeting in Minneapolis.

Law Says No
Brown said such a move would be an infringement on New Jersey's 100-mile territorial protection rights listed in the ABA by-laws.

Rubin said during the playoffs that he was considering moving the Pipers, who played most of their games before crowds of 3,000 to 3,500.

The statement said Rubin "is weighing the question of keeping the ball club in Pittsburgh, where he started the Pipers, and where he would like to remain if economically possible."
