The interview with Cernik was published by the party weekly Tribuna and parts were carried by Prague Radio and the party daily Rude Pravo.

Soviet Strike on Red China Rumored

WASHINGTON — Some reports reaching Washington say the Soviets have asked Community party leaders from other countries how they would view a Russian armed strike against Red China's atomic weapons installations.

Other information received here, however, has cast doubt on the truth of these reports which came from some Western party circles following last June's Communist Congress in Moscow attended by delegates from 75 parties around the world.

The general opinion in the U.S. government is that Russia and Communist China will continue sharply at odds — but their armed conflicts are likely to be confined to border clashes rather than erupting into large-scale action.

Yet there is no doubt here about the top prioriy each of the neighboring Communist giants attaches to its dispute with Soviet party chief Leonid I. Brezhv roundly denounced Peking in his keynote speech to the Moscow Congress. Soviet ambassadors have gone to great lengths in explaining the Kremlin's case against China in calls on Western government leaders.

PITTSBURGH — Some 500 persons demonstrating for

The Office for Student Discussions was created April 14 to serve as a channel of communication between the student body, faculty and administration due to advice from Kheel after his first visit to the University.

Jacob J. Kaufman, professor of economics and director of the Institute for Research on Human Resources, agreed to serve as the first director of the office.

The day following Kaufman's appointment, three student organization presidents issued a statement rejecting the appointment. Steve Haimowitz of the White Liberation Front, Rick Collins of the Douglass Association (Black Student Union) and John Wineland and Jeff Berger of the Students for a Democratic Society rejected the appointment saying that the 25,000 students of the community had no voice in the selection of the director.

Their statement said that the appointment of Kaufman was "an example of exactly the reason that necessitated the appearance of recommendations" by Kheel. They continued to say that Kheel's recommendations stated that the nomination and selection of the director be "acceptable to both sides" and not just to the Administration.

Besides the exclusion of student voice in the appointment, the statement objected that Kaufman said the office would entertain only discussions on "bona fide" issues. The opinion of the students involved in the rejection of the of the students involved in the rejection of the appointment was that Kaufman would make value judgements on whether or not an issue is "bona fide" and as soon as he does, "he is prejudicing his position already" and preventing the office from being effective, according to Wineland.

When Kaufman agreed to serve as director of the office, he said he had no claim on it and implied that he would step down if a reorganization of the office was recommended in the future by Khael in the future by Kheel.

The two Republican leaders found a receptive audience in the Young Republicans. The teenagers demonstrated their approval when Scott said, "We Republicans are pledged to assure the country...no further ground wars in Asia. No other network can make that statement."

The Young Republicans responded similarly when Shafer, answering a question about the condition of Pennsylvania pride, said there is more now than ever before in more now than ever before in history. He claimed "Pennsylvania is the land of opportunity." Stating that Penn State offers more subjects at the lowest cost in the country, he challenged the members of the audience to be personal ambassadors of the opportunities in Pennsylvania.

"There is nothing a human "There is nothing a human being can do to stop another human being from doing what he is going to do." Shafer said when questioned about riot prevention in the state. "We must get at the root causes and eliminate festering sores...The problems of rotting, violence, killing, wounding are the most serious in society today. Anytime an individual attempts to force his will on another, he is infringing on the another, he is infringing on the rights of others. We are more fortunate in Pennsylvania than any other state—we are get-ting to the root of the pro-blems."

On the subject of aid for black education, Shafer said "We have set up special programs in state schools and given them special training." He added that the Pennsylvania Higher Education Assistance Agency program is available to both blacks and whites. whites.

Scott, who called the Republican party the party of Work through channels if you can: if not challenge the rigid not, challenge the rigid establishment. Let them bring you in but not take you in."

At the same time he cautioned them not to fight Republicans if they could. He also said, "Don't call names. I used to and learned not to do it."

'Some Students Hide Behind Communication Gap'

Rosenblatt Favors Student Power

If anyone at Penn State knows anything about making decisions concerning student life, it is the students themselves, said Gerd M. Rosenblatt, associate professor of chemistry.

Rosenblatt, a member of the Senate Committee on Undergraduate Student Affairs, emphasized that the long term academic decisions should be left to the professional educators, though such decisions will always benefit from student advice.

"But what do I know about making dorm rules? How do I know what the best visitation policy would be? Students can make those decisions better. They know a lot more about it,"

Rosenblatt said.

He expressed hope that the committee will explore the areas of student life which can be turned over to the students. "I would like to see the Senate turn over to the students the powers which most directly concern them. Students should have the dominant voice in everything we define as student life—the Hetzel Union Building, dormitory rules, dining hall rules and food."

Resemblatt said.

rules and food."

Rosenblatt said he has a "very open mind" on student voting in the Senate, but that "it is not obvious to me that that is the way to do it. Even if you have a large representation of sudents voting — that is, one third or so — the students would still be out-voted by the faculty on things which the students and faculty oppose each other.

"But if the Senate is no longer handling these things (which directly concern students) it would make the question of student vote a little more mute.

"I'm not saying that I'm walking into this with every answer for Penn State: I'm sure that if and when this is brought to the committees and to the Senate floor, it will involve much more than merely handing the students these decision making nowers.

Everything we define as student life would be subject to extensive discussion, modification and debate." he said.

through representatives — probably the student government. In that case, the student government and the students will have to get together. If the student government is so separated from their constituents as I have heard they are, nothing is going to be accomplished," he said.

Referring to the coming school year. Rosenblatt said he expects that various "real and phony" issues will come up from the students. He said at this point he cannot determine what issues might be considered real and which might be considered phony, but the function of the committee will be to attack the real problems.

Considering whether or not the committee should anticipate problems or wait until they arise. Rosenblatt said, "The function of the committee is not that of a campus fireman."

"The Senate makes policies and rules for administrative guidance. These policies and rules should anticipate the situations which might come up. We should therefore identify problems and come up with policies to handle them."

Rosenblatt said he believes it is difficult to try to determine what problems are going to come up in any given year. "I can't figure out Penn State students. When East Halls was being constructed a few years ago, students complained that the University was wasting money. Now they're complaining about the lack of housing at the University," he said. Commenting on the communication gap which has been realized at the University. Rosenblatt said that to some it is a large gap an to others it is quite small.

"It all depends on the student's general personality and major whether he feels there is a serious communication gap between faculty and students.

"You know, it is true, too, that students don't always take advantage of opportunities to meet the faculty. Some students like to hide behind the communication gap—they like to feel anonymous." he said.

"In the large classroom, students feel somewhat anonymous. Those who hide in the back row think the professor at the front of the room is not aware of him. He gets embarrased when he passes that professor on the street and the professor says hello to hum."—RR

There is no denying that students are transients, though some would doubtless like to stay here until the draft is eliminated.

Students can contribute a great deal toward helping to improve the University, but only if they are given a voice, a vote, a chance.

AND THE REASON students can contribute so much is the very reason for which they are rejected by many members of the faculty and Administration—because they are transients.

Most of the administrators at this

TO THE EDITOR: In last Thursday's Collegian, Robert G. Quinn, Vice Chairman of the Scnate Committee on Undergraduate Student Affairs, offered his formula for a better Penn State. I would like to comment on several of his

Mr. Quinn feels "that a big problem of stu-

Mr. Quinn feels "that a big problem of students is that they have no idea where 'things' came from or why they came, but they want changes anyway." I wonder to whom Mr. Quinn is referring. These students sound like the "children" who, according to Mr. Quinn, need controls. In fact, they sound very much like Mr. Quinn himself who confesses that he would enjoy the restraint of rules if he lived in a dorm. I wonder if this similarity is a coincidence. I wonder also, whether those who so desperately wish to maintain things as they are have any idea where 'things' came from or why they came." It is heartening to read that Mr. Quinn is not fooled by the "tremendous vocabularies" of students, and that he even managed to find amusement in "the way students use these words." With such penetrating insight, Mr. Quinn will undoubtedly not expect college students to blindly accept his considered judgment as to what parents want for their children as justification for maintaining infantile restrictions.

Mr. Quinn's sincere concern for the students is at times constructions.

And what about the faculty learned professors who are reputed to be always questioning, always seeking new and better methods for doing things? Where are they?

FACULTY MEMBERS have become entrenched. They have begun to identify with the status quo, with the Administration.

These faculty members no longer question the status quo, no longer look to a better future, but would rather have the security of tenure and assured raises which comes to those who don't rock the boat.

FACULTY MEMBERS who rock the boat don't stay long at Penn State, most are quietly forced out, only a few remain for any length of time. Boat-rockers are transients also.

Students can fill the gap left by the nonquestioning, learned professors. They can perform this desirable service which keeps the University in tune with the times and aware of the future.

IN ORDER TO PERFORM this service, in order to be listened to by those entrenched, in order to have the power to be heard above the securityminded servants of the status quo, the students need the voice and the vote in the decision-making processes — the students need the chance.

philosophically that "he is a great believer indiscipline, short hair, and clean clothes."

Still, Mr. Quinn does make some valid suggestions, such as University run Rathskeller, a more balanced male-female ratio, and some dark places for guys to take their dates. It is difficult, however, in view of Mr. Quinn's opinions as to the maturity of Penn State students, to see these suggestions as other than tokenism to keep the "children" happy. Unfortunately, Mr. Quinn is not all wrong. Some Penn State students do act like children. A few wait diligently for their segregated 1:00 or 2:00 a.m. feedings. So too do some administrators behave like children, stomping their feet and throwing temper tantrums when social progress forces even them to uncover their eyes.

Mr. Quinn will have to realize that even a benevolent dictator will have a revolution on his hands if his attitude towards the people is patronizing. And I am not suggesting for a single moment that Mr. Quinn is benevolent.

This is not to say that "You Can't Take It With You" is not a legitimate reflection of an era or that it is not entertaining. In fact, it is very funny at times, but it is far less engrossing than some of the earlier Festival Theatre productions.

Although the play itself is less than satisfying, the cast is marvelous. As the occasion of the last appearance by the professional cast of the summer theatre, "You Can't Take It With You" is a showcase, with large parts for several cast numbers.

Grant Code, as Martin Vanderhof, can by himself make the evening worthwhile. In this version of the generation gap, it turns out that grandfather knows best, and grandfather is sort of the original hipple. The script all but guarantees Martin Vanderhof's place as audience favorite, but Code, in his first Festival Theatre appearance, brings special warmth and authenticity to the part.

Alice Yourman also makes her first appearance, as Penelope Sycamore. Again, mannerly as any girls mother cound wish:

The set is on a par with the consistently well-executed sets of this summer's Festival Theatre. The use of the Pavilion theatre-in-the-round is intriguingly appropriate; the audience enjoys the feeling of being brought into the Vanderhof living room.

"You Can't Take It With You" is not the most memorable of this season's Festival Theatre productions. Nevertheless, it is highly recommended, as the last chance to enjoy the truly fine professional company.

Why the Trouble in Northern Ireland?

By MICHAEL DALY

Graduate Student-Ireland

Graduate Student—Ireland

To grasp the whole complex problem of the present trouble in Ireland and its causes would require much historical research in addition to studying the current situation. Probably the easiest way for Americans wishing to understand what it is all about is to compare the social situation that exists in the southern part of the U.S. up until recent times with the position in -Northern Ireland. The situation, although different in detail and history, is somewhat analogous in essence if "religion" is substituted for "colour", "B Special Police" for the "Klan" and the Unionist Party elite for the wealthy and powerful white "racists." Other words that need not be substituted include voting rights, discrimination, housing, jobs, etc. The analogy is further strengthened by the fact that much moral and monetary support for the extreme Protestant faction in Northern Ireland comes from South Carolina.

No more than colour is at the basis of U.S. social

No more than colour is at the basis of U.S. social troubles, religion is not at the real basis of Irish troubles. Instead it is the old classic story of the "haves" versus the "have-nots" with religion (instead of colour) used as a convenient label of identification.

In Northern Ireland no citizen may apply for a job, for a house, for education grants, for social security benefits, for welfare payments or any other of the normal necessities of life without first filling out his religious status on the application form. Then, depending on religion stated, one either goes to the top of the que que (non-Catholic) or to the bottom (Catholic). The following tables give an instance of the distribution of jobs in one local government institution. Discrimination is even more rampant in housing, medical benefts, etc. These figures refer to the city of Londonderry where the troubles have been most severe.

PAUL BATES

These two tables when compared give some indication of what all the trouble is about. With a Catholic population of just over 2-3 of the total being given less than 1-3 of the available jobs in administering the city offices there is evidently something blatantly wrong. In addition the same source indicates that Catholic employees of the Corporation netted only 26 per cent of the total salary bill as against 74 per cent for non-Catholic employees so that even those employed are not getting proportionate pay.

Apart from discrimination in jobs, housing, benefits etc. a few other rather undesirable facets of life in Northern Ireland exist. Americans wonder why Catholics have been reported as being afraid of the police who, after all, should be impartial. The trouble is that in a land where the non-Catholic population only outnumber the Catholic sector by a ratio of about 2 to 1 there are roughly 8 non-Catholic police members for every 1 Catholic. When this force is augmented by the B Specials (which are the armed wing of the ruling Unionist elite) Catholics indeed have reason to doubt the impartiality of the law. In addition Northern Ireland is probably the only region in Western civilization where the habeas corpus writ may not be issued. Under the Special Powers Act (1933) any person may be imprisoned and held without trial for any length of time whatever.

When it comes to the question of voting rights it is not hard to assess the extent of manipulation and gerrymandering. The population of Northern Ireland is about 1.6 million divided into 1 million non-Catholic and 0.6 million Catholic. Of the 13 seats of the Westminister (British) Parliament alloted to Northern Ireland all were filled by Unionist (Protestant) members until the last general election when one Labour candidate was elected. Since then the youngest member of the British House of Parliament, Miss Bernadette Devlin, was elected in a by-election. Thus in the British Parliament eleven out of thirteen seats are held by non-Catholics. In the Ireland Parliament, responsible for internal affairs, out of a total of 52 members only 11 are Catholic. At local level the situation is worse and it is from here that much of the power for discrimination in houses, jobs etc. stems. The voting rights at local level is dependent on property not on "one-man one-vote" and this is the critical factor.

This is the situation as it has existed in Northern When it comes to the question of voting rights

This is the cruical factor.

This is the situation as it has existed in Northern Ireland since it was first founded by an Act (1920) of British Parliament at the request of Northern industrialists who feared the loss of their British market in a united independent Ireland. Religion was the tool used to sell the idea of separation to the ordinary man but economics and power are the real root causes. British taxpayers' contributions (estimates of subsidies, direct and indirect, to bolster the non-viable Northern Ireland economy range from $250-$350 million per annum) and the British army has supported this society since its inception.

It is extremely difficult to justify British policy in regard to Northern Ireland although if one considers South Africa and Rhodesia it is more or less consistent. Having set up Northern Ireland by an Act of their own parliament and having supported it ever since with money and arms the British government has politely ignored the injustices and illegal manipulations that have kept the Unionist elite in power there. The British press is "wringing its hands" over the sorry mess but it is too late as the adverse publicity in the world press in regard to British policy in Northern Ireland has once more lessened British influence as a moral force among nations.

Down through the years many prominent people Down through the years many prominent people of known integrity and moderate persuasion have pleaded with successive British governments to remedy the glaring inequalities so obvious in Northern Ireland life. Thus no plea of ignorance, however eloquent, can be entertained as a British excuse since all people of those islands knew all along exactly what was going on. That Britain could have done something about it before this is evident from the ease of her intervention now. However it is: a sad done something about it before this is evident from the ease of her intervention now. However it is a sad reflection on Britain, and on humanity in general, that the legitimate grievances and the cruel injustices of the oppressed people of Northern Ireland, and the world at large, have to await violence, burnings and bloodshed before being listened to and removed. The trouble in Ireland is just one more in a series of lessons which teach that social edifices built on fear and injustice are as inevitable to collapse as a house without foundations in the recent Mississippi hurricane.

Mr. Quinn's sincere concern for the students is, at times, overwhelming, Mr. Quinn feels that, of course, college students should be treated as children. As he points out with characteristic insight. "It they were treated like adults, most of them would be in jail." It is indeed fortunate that the Penn State student has a friend like Mr. Quinn with his formula for instant infantilism to keep him out of jail.

Lest it be thought that Mr. Quinn's suggestions are mere off-the-cuff opinions, one should be aware that these suggestions are based on deep convictions as to the worth of every individual. Thus, Mr. Quinn points out his is the revolutionary new grapefruit diet that everyone is suddenly talking about. Literally thousands upon thousands of copies have been passed from hand to hand in factories, plants and offices throughout the U.S. and Canada. Word of its success has spread like wild-fire, because this is the one diet that really seems to work for most overweight people. A well known Torontc columnist recently praised it to the skies. He reported losing 20 pounds quickly and easily long after he despaired of ever getting down to his wartime weight of 165 pounds. All this without cutting out the occasional beer or rye. If it is followed exactly the average overweight person should lose 10 pounds in 10 days. There will be no weight loss in the first four days. But you will solve one pound a day until the 10th day. Then you will lose one pound aday until the 10th day. Then you will lose 1½ pounds every two days until you get down to your proper weight. Best of all there should be no hunger pangs. Now revised and enlarged, this new diet plan lets you stuff yourself with foods that were formerly 'forbidden'. Such as big steaks, trimmed with fat, Southern fried chicken, rich gravies, mayonnaise, lobsters, swimming in butter, bacon, fats, sausages and scrambled eggs. You can eat until you should lose 10 pounds in the first ten days, plus 1½ pounds every two days thereafter until your weight is down to normal. The secret behind this new "Quick weight loss" is not generally known. Fat, it has been theorized, does not form fat. Perhaps fat fights fat. And the grapefruit juice in this new diet might act as a catalyst (the "trigger") to start the fat burning process. You stuff yourself on the permitted foods listed in the diet plan, and still lose unsightly fat and excess body fluids. When the fat and bloat are gone you will cease to lose weight, and your weight will remain controlled. A copy of this new and startlingly successful diet plan can be obtained by sending $2$ to SPECIAL HOLIDAY INN BUFFETS
