

Chance To Talk

ONCE AGAIN this year, the College of The Liberal Arts is leading the way in broadening communication between students and faculty members.

Liberal Arts Student Council is sponsoring a Discussion Day tomorrow, when students can meet with faculty members, talking with them on a personal basis.

In this way, students can relay problems they are having without going through the red tape or embarrassing situations often involved in meeting with professors. The faculty members in the HUB should be eager and receptive to hear complaints, queries and suggestions. That's the whole purpose of the HUB session.

SOAP BOX style oratory may be alright for airing grievances, but when constructive changes are the goal, critics must take their cases to the persons capable of acting on them.

It is often difficult for a professor to deal fairly with a procedural or curriculum question when it is directed to him from the middle of a crowd of 400 in Forum Building. But on a one-to-a-few basis, such as would be the rule at the Discussion Day, a concerned professor can deal with a complaint more directly.

WHAT IS IMPORTANT about the Liberal Arts faculty members is that not only are they willing to listen to student complaints, but they are eager to do whatever is possible to satisfy legitimate grievances.

Liberal Arts Student Council President Pete O'Donnell is optimistic about the meeting. "The Liberal Arts faculty is amazingly receptive to change. It is ready for meaningful give and take with students outside the classroom barrier. Now all we need are enough concerned students."

O'Donnell is close to the crucial point of the discussions session. For it to be successful, any students who want to rap about problems they've encountered in the college must turn out for Discussion Day.

MAKE IT TO the HUB Reading Room before 4 p.m. tomorrow.

Women's Liberation Movement: Bosom Binding—Bad Business?

By PAT GUROSKY
Collegian Assistant City Editor

All over the nation women are once again heeding the call. Shedding their aprons, brandishing spatulas and abandoning their bridge clubs, they can be seen boldly storming employment offices, picketing beauty contests and spunkily parading in protest.

It's nothing new. Ever since the first cave man whopped his chosen mate with his club and dragged her off to his stoney abode (or so the story goes) the female has been the submissive member of society. But all along certain women have rebelled against this lower position and fought for the freedoms, rights and responsibilities rightfully theirs as human beings.

MISS GUROSKY

But today's neofeminists are going even farther. They ask their sisters to shed not only their aprons, but their bras as well.

For the bra, they claim, is the supreme symbol of the restrictions still clamped on women in our society today.

The women's liberation movement—some call it the braless revolution—varies widely in its goals and in the militancy of its members. Some want nothing short of a complete reversal of the "mom-wife at home with the kids and dad-hubby at work earning money" roles of most of the world's cultures. The movement unfortunately also has in its ranks bitter souls who are just plain man-haters and who pursue a personal vendetta against the alleged sexual exploitation of women by men.

Others, like NOW (National Organization for Women) fight adamantly but quietly for abolition of abortion laws and against de-facto discrimination against women in hiring.

So what does all this have to do with the supposedly pampered Penn State coed, as tradition-bound as you can get and about as easy to incite to action as a pregnant cow?

For the most part, absolutely nothing.

The typical coed here will never have to face discrimination against her sex. She'll be a school teacher or home economist (human developer?) for two years, then settle down, honestly happy with hubby, home and humble household harassments. There's nothing wrong with this, as long as she's not fooling herself.

But there are girls here who know themselves well enough that they can courageously face the fact (and it does take a bit of nerve) that they can't hold marriage and motherhood as cherished ideals and the ultimate goals of their lives.

Perhaps they are girls who will have to compete against men in their chosen professions—or perhaps they've already met problems in dealing with the lovable yet super-sensitive male ego—even here at University Park.

Case in point: in an interview for a high student appointed post on campus a coed was asked by her male interviewer how, if she received the position, she would "change the disadvantage of being a woman into an advantage."

Being a woman isn't a natural disadvantage—that only comes when men feel they could be surpassed by women, and take steps to stop them. Some of the back room bull sessions of BMOCs criticizing certain female student executives on campus show this is true.

The PSU coed still gets the raw end of the deal here in many ways. Take our admissions policy for example. You don't really think the Trustees whipped up the three to one male-female ratio to provide us with a really swell social life, did you? The University has repeatedly been charged with employing higher entrance requirements for women than for men.

(On the ratio bit, let's be honest—is it really that great? After a national magazine a few years ago proclaimed PSU males to rank among the ugliest and dullest on the nation's campuses, and coeds confided in their dorm rooms that they agreed, some would say—so what?)

Sure, beginning with this week, coeds don't have hours anymore. Sure 21-year-old senior women can live downtown. But 17, 18, 19 and 20-year-old women are still confined to the dorms while men students the same age have full freedom to live where they want. As long as this and other injustices (there are many) exist, there is work for PSU women to do.

So, women, even if you're not ready to climb on the revolutionary bandwagon to fight for your rights, at least experiment with going braless. You might find yourself enjoying that freedom, and craving for more.

'American Revolution 2'

By PAUL SEYDOR
Collegian Film Critic

The scenes of violence during the Chicago Convention which open the new documentary "American Revolution 2" (now at Twelvetrees through Friday) are liable to prompt you to a bereaved dismissal: "Oh, this again!" Fortunately that impression is but brief, for the Convention is used only as a necessary introduction for a penetrating study of a community in action. Set in Chicago, the movie follows the efforts of three groups determined to halt the police brutality of which they are the victims.

"Burn, Baby, Burn" is changing to "Build, Baby, Build."

The three groups are a Chicago contingent of the Black Panthers, led by an impressive and impressively intelligent young militant named Bobby Lee; some poor, uneducated whites who, sick of unjust treatment from the police, have formed themselves into an organization called the Young Patriots, and some upper-income middle class whites genuinely interested in working with the poor and disenfranchised.

Although a documentary, "American Revolution 2" plays like a well-constructed story and moves with a much unflagging interest, while rarely forgetting its purpose to inform. The most intriguing aspect of the movie is its portrait of Lee, who emerges as a startlingly well-directed individual. The way, for instance, his sheer determination and unshakable "cool" enables him to win over an audience of hostile middle-class whites is one of the most authentic pieces of drama I've ever witnessed. Even more interesting is the way he talks the fledgling Young Patriots out of violence, and then helps them organize and search for a stronger, presumably more effectual power-base in the community. "You got to go to the community," he says, "you got to tell them 'This is where we're at,' to tell them what you believe and what you're trying to do. You got to get them behind you."

The movie then follows their efforts to get that support, winding up on an extraordinary meeting between the citizens, aided by the Black Panthers and the Young Patriots, and a representative of the police department. Although the sergeant promises to do something about the complaints, it is left unresolved as to whether or not he does (Will there be a sequel?), and the movie closes on the skepticism of the militants.

There are flaws, to be sure: Partly by his own mouth and partly by the moviemakers' bias, the police sergeant is made to look like a fool (something which, admittedly, hardly places undue stress on the imagination). But it is still inexcusable that there should be no attempt to suggest the problems of his position. He is, in other words, turned into a type, an object of too easy scorn and derision. Often the moviemakers whet our curiosity more than satisfy it. I wanted to know much more about Lee (some interesting ambiguities are raised but then dropped, i.e., why, compared to his poor, black peers, he is so well-dressed in clothes that look fairly expensive). I wished for a fuller portrait of the Young Patriots rather than a sketchy outline. Couldn't the moviemakers, whose cameras have been so penetrating, have gotten some actual footage of the day-to-day police intimidation that caused so many of these people's complaints? I believe most of what was charged, but, without being shown and getting it all from one side, I'm uneasy in my belief.

I'm also uneasy about the moviemakers. They are identified only as The Film Group, Inc., of Chicago; such collective anonymity makes me suspicious not only of intent but of result. I don't believe this movie is a put-up job (and even if it is, that wouldn't alter much of its power or penetration), but if it is, that might explain the glaring omissions. For instance, why doesn't the movie go on to show us what, if anything, the police sergeant does subsequent to the meeting? If it were shown that he made an honest attempt to investigate the complaints, then our impression of him would have to be drastically altered.

The chief value of "American Revolution 2," aside from its surprising suggestions of hope, seem to me to be its exploration and depiction of certain prevalent attitudes among the young, the poor, the disenfranchised, the disillusioned. On the level it is, by turns, laughably funny, depressing, frightening, and, most importantly for a documentary, illuminating.

Chicago did not, as some have claimed, split this country right down the middle; it merely served as the ultimate and unmistakable confirmation of a latent schism that has been extant far too long, and has deepened far too rapidly. Perhaps movies like "American Revolution 2," and the recent "Medium Cool," and last year's "Weekend," will help us to understand this division in the simple, human terms that it seems only film is capable of; therefore, more equipped to begin the difficult process of reconciliation. Unless I'm misreading him totally, Bobby Lee and others like him, despite their words and because of their actions, are telling us that "Burn, baby, burn" is changing to "Build, baby, build."

SDS Explains NLF Flag

TO THE EDITOR: Some people in this community feel that it is incongruous to march for peace in Vietnam and at the same time indicate support for the National Liberation Front, the victims of the relentless imperialistic war waged by the U.S. ruling class.

SDS on the other hand declares that to simply "be for peace" and not support actively the heroic struggle of the Vietnamese is morally and intellectually dishonest. It ignores the very reasons why the ruling class continues to violently deny self-determination to the Vietnamese.

By carrying the NLF flag, SDS declares open support for the aims of the Vietnamese people. We do not feel that the so-called "violence" of the oppressed Vietnamese is immoral or unjustified. In the face of U.S. imperialism, any and all methods of struggle are imperative in order to achieve their just revolutionary demands. We, the members of SDS, declare not only our support for the total victory of the NLF, but also for the liberation struggles of all people oppressed by U.S. imperialism.

We call for the withdrawal of all U.S. occupation troops from the Third World and from within our own borders. We reaffirm our conviction that only the destruction of capitalism in our country will make possible complete liberation and freedom for all peoples of the world.

Unity in Desire for Peace

TO THE EDITOR: I want to comment on Mr. Blanch's letter in Saturday's Collegian from the point of view of a foreign student. Mr. Blanch says: "...had we presented the Communists with a unified America the war would be over by now." This is a very doubtful statement and only proves how malinformed the writer is, concerning U.S. tactics of negotiation in Paris and about failures of U.S. diplomacy before the "peace talks" even started.

However, countries all over the globe show an ever increasing concern about the "peace talks" in this country regarding the war. A positive American image is fading sadly and rapidly, making it at best unpleasant for a U.S. citizen to go abroad or to cross their own borders to the south.

If you, Mr. Blanch, are not concerned about the world's opinion, go ahead, blame the liberal students for the prolonging of the war. But remember also, that they are active in showing the world that somebody in this country cares and believes that the unity of a people is best manifested in the desire for peace.

In my opinion a "united America" of your definition would result in an extinction in "unity" of the Vietnamese people.

If you were always near a socket when you needed a shave, that would be one thing. But you aren't. You're all over the place. So you need a shaver that goes where it's happening.

A shaver like the brand-new battery-operated Norelco Cordless 20B. With floating heads that fit the curves of a man's face.

And self-sharpening blades inside those floating heads that shave close and smooth every day. The Norelco unique rotary action keeps the blades sharp while it strokes off whiskers. Every time you shave. The Norelco Cordless gives you close shaves anywhere. Up to 30 days of shaves on only 4 nightlight batteries.

Handsomely styled in jet black and chrome, there's even a mirror inside the cap. So you can see what you're shaving. And it's small enough to fit your pocket. Very self-sufficient. All ready to sock it to your beard.

Three University Profs Consult with IDA

publicity. "Although IDA very much values the contribution made by the universities through the years," King told me, "the fact is that its need of direct university backing and advice has lessened somewhat over the years as it has become established as an organization which can stand on its own."

Indeed, IDA has continued its recruitment of scientists from the academic community, as institutional membership in IDA had never been a prerequisite for employment as a consultant.

Muzzled Protests

The change in corporate structure did, however, virtually muzzle student protests. It tainted any further attacks on IDA as an intrusion on academic freedom, since the universities were officially out of the game and only the profs, who may consult or research for whoever they please, remained. At Columbia, Rudd was caught mouthing the rather hypocritical notion that "academic freedom does not include the freedom to perform secret research for the Pentagon in 1968."

Implicit in the SDS rhetoric, of course, is an almost religious belief in American militarism, and a simultaneous commitment to cut off its research base, even if that means dictating the rights of some professors. "It's not a question of doing the stuff (military research) here," SDS correspondent Buckley said last year at University Park, "Penn State is in the goddamn body. It's an insidious branch of research for the Department of Defense. What they're doing is taking academic skills to the criminal business of government. It's a question of making the University complicit with the war machine."

Wells H. Keddie, an assistant professor of labor studies and the faculty adviser to SDS at Penn State, is a ruggedly handsome man with the sharply defined features of an outdoorsman. He agrees with Buckley, although his voice remains calm and his face relaxed when discussing the subject.

"This is one more way to harness the needs of the military to the universities," Keddie said of IDA. "It is an abomination. It is immoral to research how to kill people, how to put down the national ambitions of people."

Most of those who would disengage the academic institutions from the Department of Defense are equally wary of dictating the rights of professors who individually choose to do defense research or consultation on their own time.

"There are times... when the best brains in some particular specialty are to be found on a university campus," Walker wrote in his letter to USG, "and the individual involved is willing, or even eager, to help his government. In such cases, his decision is, and I believe should be, an individual matter. As long as the work he performs does not interfere with his teaching or other academic duties, he should, in my opinion, be permitted to do as he sees fit."

Indeed, a case can be made for the universities' encouragement of extracurricular research, especially for a prestigious think-tank like IDA. Universities are ranked academically, not by the caliber of their students, but by the reputation of their faculties, which attract the students.

Major Coup

The selection of a professor to work for IDA, and particularly for Jason, one Penn State faculty said, is a major coup for a university. It is perhaps one of the best indications of faculty expertise.

HERSCHEL W. LEIBOWITZ
Professor of Psychology

No Penn State faculty member has ever been chosen as a Jason scholar.

Most of the unflattering fuss directed against IDA has concerned Jason and its highly classified work on counterinsurgency, infiltration and guerrilla warfare. SDS claims this work contributes to the manipulation of foreign governments and people.

The Jason work, however, is conducted during the summer months and, Norman L. Christeller, recently retired IDA vice president and general manager, emphasizes, off campus.

Indeed, a Jason summer session held in Massachusetts in 1967, according to IDA literature, dealt with the scientific aspects of counterinsurgency, infiltration and guerrilla warfare. And the meeting was so secret, Science magazine claimed, that the janitor had to receive a high security clearance before he could clean the building.

Criticism of IDA's activities, of course, is not limited to Jason. All other divisions in the institute are engaged in weapons research and evaluation, and some sponsor studies of foreign governments, populations and foreign policy—all of which gives SDS plenty of ammunition.

Henry S. Albinski, an associate professor of political science at Penn State and a recent addition to the IDA rolls, is acting as a consultant on a classified IDA study of Australian and New Zealand foreign policy. Sponsored by the Economic and Political Studies Division, the research, in the context of current U.S. involvement in Southeast Asia, could contribute to American political and economic policies toward that area in the next decade.

Albinski, who was not eager to talk about the project, said his will be a dual role of consultation with IDA people during the researching and writing of the paper, and analysis and criticism when the paper is completed.

"It is one of the more secrete things I can do with IDA," he said with a chuckle. Albinski did say that the report will be a projection of the foreign defense policies of the two Pacific island nations in the future, and an overall prognosis of developments in that part of the world. An example of the methodology, he said, will be a study of the inspirational and motivational features which influence foreign policy decisions.

Contrary to the simplism of inherent evil in every defense sponsored project, not all IDA or Defense Department research has completely military or manipulative overtones. It is a sad comment, in fact, that often the greatest advances—with broad implications for the uplift of society—are at the same time the most potentially dangerous militarily, and would not have been made if not for its military potential.

This is the dilemma which the scientist faces. The classic example, or course, was the work on nuclear fission during World War II, the immediateness of which could not have fooled even the most absent-minded professor. But the same energy which culminates in mushroom cloud can just as easily mean undreamed affluence for the entire globe.

Look at Future

"Every technological advance can be used for humane or inhumane uses," Herschel W. Leibowitz, professor of psychology at Penn State, said. "The military can take advantage of any technology. Every person has to ask himself about the implications of his research. We have to look at the long range future. Will the advance be of benefit or detriment to society?"

Leibowitz was faced with such a fundamental choice three years ago. Approached by IDA, he was asked to do unclassified research on visual perception as it related to infrared imagery. Translated, the Department of Defense was interested in exposing camouflaged Vietcong and material infiltrating down the Ho Chi Minh trail. Infrared photo reconnaissance, then, being researched at Michigan, offered the answer and Leibowitz was recognized as one who could contribute to its development.

Leibowitz is a lanky man, maybe 6 feet 3 inches tall, with wisps of gray running through his long black hair. He speaks in short bursts, struggling to fit words and phrases into the meaning he is trying to convey. And unlike many scientists, his words reveal a troubled conscience over the uses of his contributions.

"Sure, there are military uses for infrared imagery," he said uncomfortably. "It's being used right now in Vietnam."

Infrared imagery, essentially, is a new technology which makes it possible to develop a thermal map of terrain. From a plane, an infrared camera can pinpoint the location of a camouflaged truck or a group of men in dense jungle, simply because both trucks and men produce a different quantity of heat than their surroundings.

The same technique that can be used militarily to hunt down human beings, however, can be used to put food in the distended stomach of a starving Biafran baby. Infrared technology, Leibowitz explains, is "an extension of man's senses."

It can be used to increase the food production by exposing unhealthy groves of plants, which reflect less heat than healthy ones; it can pinpoint industries, and the water and thermal pollution they contribute; it can map cities, volcanoes and pinpoint hidden natural resources and underground fires.

Wanted for Vietnam

Infrared technology, then, has a diversity of application literally as broad as life and death. But Leibowitz did not have to fool himself. IDA wanted infrared technology for use in Vietnam. So the choice was not easy. It involved a look into the future. And a personal judgment.

"I believe the big problem of society is not war and peace," Leibowitz said. "It is finding natural resources. If we don't find them, we will create conditions which will lead to international tensions.

"The big problem will be population. We need more resources. We have the choice of either establishing a lower population growth rate, or increasing the discovery rate of our resources. This (infrared technology) may be the only hope for increasing the discovery rate."

It likewise would be difficult to charge a case of military complicity against George M. Guthrie, a professor and colleague of Leibowitz in psychology. Guthrie, a short, relaxed man with the beginnings of a slight middle class, middle aged roll, will consult with IDA after the conclusion of his three year study of the Philippines at the end of June.

Guthrie's study is supported by the Advanced Research Projects Agency, the Defense Research Agency, which sponsors most scientific research on advanced weapons systems. The study, though, is an unclassified, interdisciplinary analysis of the impact of modernization on the attitudes, values and behavior of the Filipino people.

The study has attracted social scientists from Northwestern, Chicago, Haverford, Swarthmore and Havan, plus a number of Filipino participants from Ateneo de Manila University. In the Quarterly Letter Report of July-September 1968, a few preliminary findings were released:

GEORGE M. GUTHRIE
Professor of Psychology

"If there is one generalization we could offer at this point, it is that the impediments to the adoption of many improvements do not lie in the lack of information or in inherently conservative attitudes of the people. There is a great awareness of the need for change and of the changes possible in agriculture, health, education, government administration and other fields as well. Improvements which almost every one desires are impeded by the extremely low income of a high percentage of the people, the death or absence of appropriate models and the nature of person to person relationships within the society."

Contains Implications

That the study has political impact and contains implications for future American policy pronouncements is evident from the eagerness of IDA to employ Guthrie as a consultant. And Guthrie himself concedes that there are definite lessons to be learned from the work.

"I would hope that the American government and military personnel in a position of influence would read our books," Guthrie said. "The Philippines are an excellent place to study the introduction of the American form of government into Southeast Asia.

"I think," Guthrie continued seriously, "that our research should lead the Department of Defense to doubt the wisdom of spreading arms around the world."

Anti-establishment testimony such as Guthrie's is a melody to the ears of university presidents who defended their sponsorship of IDA because of its professional independence from the government. This is an important consideration in view of the controversy over the military-

Chile Military Units Threaten Coup

SANTIAGO, Chile — A revolt by two units of an army division posed the threat yesterday of a military coup in Chile for the first time in 30 years.

But late in the day, President Eduardo Frei told the nation on radio and television that he had the "overwhelming backing of all the armed forces throughout the country" and declared, "No one will move me from here."

The government imposed a state of siege and suspended Congress so it could deal with what it called an "attempt at military sedition."

The uprising was led by Brig. Gen. Roberto Viaux Maramba, who recently was removed from command of the 1st Army Division at the northern city of Antofagasta and ordered into retirement.

While vowing to shoot it out with the government if necessary, Viaux said his sole purpose was to gain a hearing for grievances of army officers who complain about extremely low pay, lack of adequate equipment and other drawbacks.

Brandt Wins West German Chancellorship

BONN — Social Democrat leader Willy Brandt was elected West Germany's first Socialist chancellor yesterday by a narrow margin, ringing down the curtain on 20 years of Christian Democrat rule.

Three weeks after the Sept. 28 federal elections, the new Bundestag voted the 55-year-old Brandt into office by 51 votes, two more than the required absolute majority.

While Brandt was celebrating his victory, financial observers in Bonn said they expect his government to decide in the next few days on evaluation of the mark. Bonn sources said they expect the decision at a Cabinet meeting Friday, with an announcement of the mark's new value by the week's end. Yesterday the new chancellor announced his Coalition Cabinet of 12 Social Democrats and three Free Democrat ministers.

The election capped a long and colorful political career. It was Brandt's third successive try at the chancellorship.

His success was made possible by nationwide gains in the federal election, giving the Socialists 224 seats, 22 more than in the last election.

Senator Predicts Troop Withdrawal

WASHINGTON — Sen. George D. Aiken, dean of Senate Republicans, said yesterday he expects practically all American ground troops will be withdrawn from South Vietnam within one year.

The Vermont senator sounded a keynote for optimistic forecasts about the war, and the Senate Foreign Relations Committee postponed a planned series of Vietnam hearings until after President Nixon reports to the nation on his policy Nov. 3.

"As a matter of courtesy it seemed proper for the committee to defer its hearings until after the President has spoken," Sen. J. W. Fulbright (D-Ark.) the chairman of the committee said.

The hearings were to have opened next Monday for five, probably televised, days including appearances by Secretary of State William P. Rogers and Secretary of Defense Melvin R. Laird.

Past performance indicated they would become a forum for critics of the administration.

No Nixon Comment On Agnew Speech

WASHINGTON — President Nixon appeared yesterday to be trying to disassociate himself from Vice President Spiro T. Agnew's denunciation of last week's peace demonstration.

For the second day in a row presidential press secretary Ronald L. Ziegler said the Agnew speech had not been seen nor reviewed in advance by the White House.

At the State Department, press officer Robert J. McCloskey said a very different kind of statement which had been made by Secretary William P. Rogers in New York Monday night was made known to the White House in advance of its delivery.

Agnew was thus pictured by the White House as having acted on his own, so far as the President is concerned, when he said in a New Orleans speech Sunday night that the "Moratorium Day demonstration was encouraged by 'an effete corps of impudent snobs,' and 'hard core dissidents and professional anarchists' were planning for violent action in the streets next month."

Decision Deferred On Kopechne Case

WILKES-BARRE — A judge reserved decision yesterday on a petition for an autopsy on the body of Mary Jo Kopechne who died in Sen. Edward M. Kennedy's submerged automobile in waters off Chappaquiddick Island, Mass. Dist. Atty. Edmund Dinis, who made the request, indicated he may not press further for an autopsy if the Pennsylvania court ruling goes against him.

Judge Bernard C. Brominski of Common Pleas Court adjourned the hearing at 3:05 p. m. after two days of testimony.

Brominski gave no indication when he would reach a verdict. He did say he would give all parties at least hours' advance notice.

Dinis of New Bedford, Mass., said throughout the proceedings he needs the results of an autopsy for an inquest he has scheduled into the 28-year-old secretary's death. But after the hearing he said, "I don't think we'll go any further to appeal if we lose."

Coalition Contemplates Moratorium Outcome

By JEFF BECKER

Collegian Staff Writer

A week has passed since last Wednesday's National Vietnam War Moratorium and those involved have had time to contemplate the outcome of that day. Charles Veley, coordinator of the Moratorium activities at the University, and others who worked with him are generally pleased with the day's results.

"Very exciting...very satisfying...very beautiful," were the words many people used to describe the day here.

Veley said the day "gave people a chance to see the movement not as an underground thing, but as a responsible public action." He added, "It accomplished the superficial ends, to get people out to see each other. But we've got to get people to keep working."

Veley said a major complaint of many people was that there was not enough opportunity for them to participate in an open discussion.

He said next month's two-day Moratorium would be more concerned with audience participation and "there would be lots of time devoted to questions and answers."

According to Veley, the major thrust of the next Moratorium, Nov. 14, will be aimed at local workshop groups, classrooms, houses and churches.

Pete Wood, co-chairman of the Coalition for Peace, expressed the disappointment of many people. "People were expecting to have more information than they did; they were disappointed in that sense. We're planning Nov. 14 to be a day of small group instruction so they can get answers to their questions."

Wood was optimistic about the results of the day, though. He called the Moratorium participation "a turning point for this campus."

Thomas Fossi, a member of the Coalition for Peace, said the Moratorium "got people thinking again when there was a general slacking of opinion of the Vietnam War." And although the day did have instructional drawbacks, Fossi said it did prompt a lot of people to express themselves.

Veley and Fossi both expressed disappointment at the way the news media reported the Moratorium. They said the media was not concerned with what had been accomplished but that the movement had been peaceful.

Plans for the University's next Moratorium call for a day of discussion Nov. 14 and participation in the Washington demonstration Nov. 15.

Fossi warned, "The people who organized this movement should not pat each other on the back and go home. This isn't the end of just one demonstration. Our enthusiasm for the next Moratorium is tempered because we wish there wouldn't be a need for another one."

Peace Center Coordinator Laurie Trieb said, "The general theme we got from the Moratorium was, 'no more Vietnams.' We're really trying to think now about what direction we're going to take."

Author Kerouac Dies; Led 'Beat Generation'

ST. PETERSBURG, Fla. — Jack Kerouac, whose stirring tales about life on the road in the 1950's made him a pioneer of the beat generation, died yesterday at age 47.

He had been admitted to St. Anthony's Hospital Monday, and died of a massive gastric hemorrhage, his wife, Stella, said.

"He had been drinking heavily for the past few days," she said. "He was a very lonely man."

"Nobody came to see him while he was alive. Why would you come now when he can't talk to you?" she said, bursting into tears, when a reporter who came to check the death report asked if her husband was home.

In a recent interview, Kerouac said, "I get lonely here. I live with my mother. She's paralyzed."

But he was almost constantly in the limelight during the late 1950's as he published his largely autobiographical accounts of his wanderings across the country during the early 1950's. He wrote novels, such as "On the Road," "The Dharma Bums" and "The Subterraneans."

Hitchhiking and driving, he crossed the country from San Francisco to New York City.

His novels rejected what he considered the materialism of the United States and advocated a free-wheeling life style that included hard drinking and marijuana.

"I smoked more grass than anyone you ever knew in your life," Kerouac said in a recent interview with reporter Jack McClintock of the St. Petersburg Times. "I came across the Mexican border one time with two and one-half pounds of grass around my waist in a silk scarf. I had one of those wide Mexican belts around me over it. I had a big bottle of tequila and I went up to the border guard and offered him some, and he said, 'no, go on through, senior.'"

Such tales fired the imagination of the youths whose generation was the forerunner of the hippie era.

Officials Deny Reports

Is Beatle Dead?

solo in "Hey Jude," have been persistent in their statements that it is McCartney who is still singing for the Beatles. But according to the Michigan Daily, voicegrams have been done on pre-1966 Beatle albums and post-1966 albums, and there is a difference.

Again, this claim has not been substantiated.

The most eerie part of the speculations, though, is the interpretation of the symbolism on the Beatle covers and in the picture sections inside their albums.

Here are some of the more interesting interpretations: —On the cover of "Sgt. Pepper," McCartney wears an armband with the initials O.P.D. in England, "O.P.D." stands for "officially pronounced dead."

—Also on "Sgt. Pepper," McCartney is wearing a medal which is supposedly only awarded posthumously.

—In one of the centerfold pictures on "Magical Mystery Tour," Beatles John Lennon, Ringo Starr and George Harrison all have red carnations, while McCartney has a black one.

—Another of these pictures is of McCartney seated behind a desk with a sign in front of him reading, "I Was."

—The Greek word for dead, it is rumored, is similar to a popular Beatle-word, "walrus." And in the song "The Glass Onion," one verse is: "Here is a clue for you all, the walrus is Paul."

One of the most interesting interpretations can be found on the cover of "Abbey Road." Pictured on the front are the four Beatles, walking from a cemetery across from what is labeled "Abbey Road." In the background is a stone wall with a crack running through it. This, as the rumor goes, is where McCartney's car crashed. The symbolic part, though, is the way the four Beatles are dressed up.

Lennon is in white, representing a priest, or God; Ringo is in black tie and tails, representing an undertaker; Harrison is dressed shabbily, representing a grave digger, and "dead" McCartney is in a black suit, with no shoes or socks on. The obvious inference, of course, is that no one is ever buried with their shoes on.

There are hundreds of other symbolic interpretations, most of them with a Far Eastern mystical significance.

One explanation proposes that McCartney is physically alive and that the death symbolism has to do with his spiritual being. The Beatles were known to be dabbling in Eastern religions and, according to the theory, McCartney was the only one who did not accept these teachings.

This particular rumor explains that the other three Beatles considered McCartney spiritually "dead"—and this is offered as an explanation for the death signs.

Do you think a bright young engineer should spend his most imaginative years on the same assignment?

Neither do we.

That's why we have a two-year Rotation Program for graduating engineers who would prefer to explore several technical areas. And that's why many of our areas are organized by function—rather than by project.

At Hughes, you might work on spacecraft, communications satellites and/or tactical missiles during your first two years.

All you need is an EE, ME or Physics degree and talent.

If you qualify, we'll arrange for you to work on several different assignments...and you can help pick them.

You may select specialized jobs, or broad systems-type jobs. Or you can choose not to change assignments if you'd rather develop in-depth skills in one area.

Either way, we think you'll like the Hughes approach.

It means you'll become more versatile in a shorter time. (And your salary will show it.)

PSU-IDA Ties Controversial

Industrial complex and the ancient—and still upheld—concept of the universities' dispassionate search for knowledge.

Former IDA Official Christeller was quite forceful in asserting IDA's independence. In an interview with the New York Times he said the Institute has been "completely independent of the government" which assures it of "being able to carry out studies that don't merely support some preconceived idea of the government."

IDA officials admit, however, that they have been under pressure to support some preconceived notions of the Pentagon. "We have a tie to the government in that most of our funding comes from it," King told me, "though this is not an immutable situation. This financial link, however, does not condition the responses we make to the questions the government poses for us to study."

"It is true that some middle levels of the DOD, faced with heavy pressures to get a job done, have occasionally desired that we bolster conclusion about matters which their own studies have led them to. We have consistently resisted such pressures and the upper management of DOD has recognized that it is not in our function to provide a respectable scientific basis for preconceived conclusions."

"Indeed, when we cease occasionally to tell the government, as the result of our study and analyses of problems, things it would prefer not to hear, then we will have failed to perform one of our most important functions," King said.

Reports Hidden
There have been at least two charges that IDA failed in one of its "most important functions." Author James Ridgeway cited a case in his book "The Closed Corporation" in which IDA made an unfavorable study of the supersonic transport plane (SST) for the pro-SST Federal Aviation Agency. Ridgeway charges that, with a congressional debate pending, the FAA hid the report from view and IDA made no move to get the study into the open. Likewise, Sen. William Fulbright, in conducting an investigation into the Gulf of Tonkin Resolution in his Senate Foreign Relations Committee, was unable to pry loose a pertinent IDA study from the Defense Department.

When we prepare a study under contract to the United States Government," King told me, in response to the two charges, "that study becomes the property of the government, and it is their prerogative to determine to whom it will be released."

Those who claim that IDA has been a restraining force on the military point to the emergence of Jason member Jerome Wiesner of MIT as the leading academic critic of the Safeguard antiballistic missile system. Wiesner recently co-edited a 340-page anti-ABM volume sponsored by Sen. Edward M. Kennedy (D-Mass.). And George W. Ruthjens Jr., former head of IDA's Weapons Systems Evaluation Division, published an article in the April 1969 issue of Scientific American in which he pointed to the futility and danger in a new round in the arms race. He particularly attacked the ABM and the independent, multiply-targeted re-entry vehicle (MIRV) now being tested.

Regardless of IDA's loyalties, the question of IDA and the universities ultimately swings in a full circle back to the perplexing program of academic freedom. With last year's change in corporate structure, formal university sponsorship of IDA was severed, throwing the case into a different and more delicate court.

The challenge now is to a professor's right to engage in defense-sponsored or defense-related research on his own time. It is a challenge with moral implications and one, as is evident from the advancement of infrared technology, which cannot be couched in black and white terms.

"The military can make use of any technological advance," grieved Leibowitz. "There's no such thing as neutral research."
He shrugged his shoulders. "So what do you do?"
Then he turned away. It was a question which had remained unanswered for centuries. And it could wait until after lunch.

Simmons French House Gives Coeds Chance To Share Language Interests

By MADELINE MAZURSKY
Collegian Staff Writer

The coed interested in conversing in French need not think that the hovering whippers of "Le Cabot" are her only recourse. The French House, located on the second floor of Simmons Hall, now offers a residence for women who share an interest in speaking French.

According to Sue Heist, French House president, the House is "a community of girls' developing friendships through a common interest in French." She stressed the autonomy of each woman in regard to her obligations to the House.

The women residents of French House are not all French majors. Any female student who has completed her second term and has passed French 304 is eligible to live in the house. New members will be admitted Winter Term.

A lounge and kitchen are special accommodations for house residents. French is spoken in the halls, lounge and bathroom. Each day "un tout en jour," usually a French slang word, is posted for a quick lesson.

Highlighting Winter Term is the annual French dinner for the House residents at the home of Madame Le Blanc, the adviser of French House. After the haute cuisine, the women traditionally provide entertainment.

Miss Heist is planning to hold discussion groups with the French Club and holding activities as other House activities.

The French House's newest inhabitant is Simone Schneider, a "femme chic" from the University of Strasbourg in France. Miss Schneider, an instructor of French 306, expressed her delight with her surroundings. She added there is no similar community living situation in the residence halls of Strasbourg, although the university provides a large range of clubs for its students.

Miss Schneider was impressed by the rapport between students and professors here. And at the thought of women wearing slacks to class at the University of Strasbourg, she shook her pretty coffee and sounded a low whistle.

Pattee To Display Playbills

A collection of Philadelphia playbills recently acquired by the University libraries is on display in the Rare Books Room on the third floor of the west wing of Pattee. The items exhibited were selected from the 901 presented by William S. Dye, III. They date from as early as 1836 and as late as 1900 and encompass an entire range of literature and music, from the top-flight presentations of the Booths, Junium and Edwin, and the great Rachel, to superlatively extravagant shows for "Tom" shows and circuses. They were collected in Philadelphia by Dye's grandfather, who was evidently a loyal fan of the grand old Philadelphia Academy.

Ben's Cheap Shots Show Thin

By DON MCKEE
Collegian Sports Editor

Ben Schwartzwalder lost more than a football game last Saturday—he lost his cool. And in a big, angry, cheap way.

Penn State whipped Schwartzwalder's Syracuse club in one of the most stirring comebacks in memory, scoring 15 points in the final quarter to win by one tally. A win like that is always going to draw some reaction from the losing coach, but Schwartzwalder went one better. From his actions and statements of last Monday, Schwartzwalder qualifies for the presidency of "The Bitter Losers Club—Central New York Branch."

Speaking at the football writers' luncheon at the New York University Club, Schwartzwalder started with an indirect attack on the officials implying that Penn State got the advantage of a lot of calls. Then he got worse.

The Syracuse coach tried to excuse his tactics by saying that he was only repeating questions asked by his players after the game. He relayed such alleged questions as "Why does it seem always happen that three of the officials for our game with Penn State come from Pennsylvania and there's never a New York official?" (Three of Saturday's officials were from Pennsylvania).

But Schwartzwalder couldn't stop there. He went on to accuse Penn State coaches of cursing on the sidelines and he accused the officials of making an incorrect call on specific plays.

He even went so far as to mention State's offensive captain, tackle Tom Jackson, by name and accused him of illegally holding Syracuse middle guard Ray White, "on almost every play."

State head coach Joe Paterno issued a statement Monday expressing disappointment at Schwartzwalder's attitude. He said in part, "it's disappointing that a leading member of our coaching profession would resort to this type of attack after such a great game by two outstanding teams."

But last night, when Paterno saw the full extent of Schwartzwalder's remarks, he had more to say.

"Ben Schwartzwalder owes Tom Jackson an apology," Paterno said, "and if we don't get one I'm going to report him to the Ethics Committee of the American Football Coaches Association."

"He has insulted a fine young man who played a fine football game."

In response to Schwartzwalder's accusation that Penn State coaches, "ran up and down the sidelines screaming and cursing," Paterno said that he and defensive line coach Jim O'Hara were the only State coaches on the sidelines.

"I'm not going to even waste time to dignify such an accusation. You can just ask the officials if either of us cursed."

No official reported any such action on the part of Penn State coaches, and the head official heard no questions from Syracuse players.

Edward Myer, Haddonfield, N.J., was the referee

(head official) for the game. "I heard nothing from any player during the game," Myer said, "except when I heard something when the interference call was made. That's all."

"I was late getting off the field after the game and even then heard no complaints."

Officials for the Penn State-Syracuse game were assigned, as usual, by Asa Bushnell, commissioner of the Eastern Collegiate Athletic Conference. George Shiebler, Bushnell's assistant, said, "Assignment of officials is definitely not made on a geographic basis." He said that in 1968 and 1967 no Pennsylvanians officiated the Penn State-Syracuse game. State won both contests.

So what Ben Schwartzwalder was trying to do last Monday was use the news media to pull a "psychic job" on his beaten players. He has an open date this week and one of the best ways to keep a team "up" for two weeks is to tell them that they've been robbed of a win.

The Syracuse players were indeed robbed. But it wasn't of a victory last Saturday—it was of their dignity as players. And the officials didn't do the stealing—their own coach did.

Gregg Wins Prediction Contest

Theodore M. Gregg is one accountant who will tell you that accuracy can be worth money, even outside the big business world. Gregg, a 9th term accounting major from Gap, Pa., is this week's winner in the Daily Collegian's football contest, but he had to be pretty accurate to do it.

He tied with Lewis Stranzl with a 27-5-1 record, and then won the tie breaker by picking the LSU - Kentucky point spread exactly. A total of 11 persons followed closely on the heels of Gregg and Stranzl with 26-6-1.
