Haynsworth Gets Mail For, Against Nomination

GREENVILLE, S. C. (AP) — The desk of Judge Clement F. Haynsworth Jr., in his secondfloor, oak-paneled office in-Greenville's federal building, is piled high with letters.

Much of the mail, the 56-year-old jurist said in an interview, is in support of his nomination to be a U. S. Supreme Court justice.

"Of course," he added, "there is the other. There are some not-so-friendly letters. But the vast majority are lavorable."

As the U.S. Senate ponders the nomination. Haynsworth recalled that the other men, too, have had difficult times in obtaining confirmation to the high court.

"Look at Mr. Justice Brandeis and the attack couched in the tenor of chics leveled against him." said Haynsworth. "Look at Justice Black and Chief Justice Hughes. All were attacked. All were to become outstanding, excellent justices. If you go far enough back in history, you will find examples of most things." Haynsworth hesitated, puffed a cigarette, then, choosing his words carefully, said, "No one enjoys being subjected to this kind of attack. It is difficult.

"The Senate has the right to decide to what extent I should be scrutinized. I am not going to find fault with them." Haynsworth is chief judge of the U.S. 4th Circuit Court of Appeals, which sits in Richmond. The court is not in session now.

Havnsworth declined to answer specifically any of the con-Haynsworth declined to answer specifically any of the conflict of interest charges leveled by his Senate critics. "There is a long tradition in the judiciary." he said. "A judge attacked on ethics does not defend himself. That falls within the realm of the bar. So, in this whole area. I won't comment."

The case against Haynsworth has been built primarily on accusations that it was improper for him to hear cases involving companies in which he held stock.

Haynsworth said he has not considered asking that his name be withdrawn.

Haynsworth said he has not considered asking that his name be withdrawn.

"Nor will I suggest this." he said. "A retraction would seem to lend credence to the charges. I have never considered this, quite the contrary.

"As I said, this is no fun to go through-but I am not so disconcerted that I will ask to get out."

"Nor," he said, "will I blast the folks opposing me-or speculate on their reasons."

"I don't want to see that I had as intiling the said."

"I don't want to say that I had no inkling that there might be a controversy," he said, "but I did not expect what has developed."

be a controversy," he said, "but I did not expect what has developed."

Haynsworth's wife says he is up early in the morning "talking on the telephone, keeping very busy, with even 15 minutes of free time a day, a lot for him. He is spending much time at his office.

"Confirmation," she said, "is a lovely word."

There is no place in his home town of Greenville where Haynsworth can escape the pressures of controversy. If he tries to forget at a party, there will always he someone who appears at his elbow to whisper support. Someone like Mayor'R. Cooper White Jr., who recalls that at a party he told Haynsworth. "Hang in there, Clement."

"Judge Haynsworth," says White, "is a big man and he might not show the depth of his concern over this. But it is bothering him that people are trying to paint him in a horrible light. It's a case where you feel you haven't done anything dishonorable and people are beating the hell out of you."

A 116-92 standing vote nailed the amendment into the housing measure after it fell first one and then two votes short the day before.

However there is no similar provision in the $6.3-billion housing bill which previously cleared the Senate. Its fate will be decided in a conference committee between the two branches of Congress.

Confusion about Meaning

Weicker said there was some confusion surrounding the meaning of the amendment when it first was proposed on Wednesday.

Rep. Sidney R. Yates a liberal Democrat from Chicago confirmed this and helped muster support for another shot at the proposal on Thursday.

War's End Means Trouble for Thais

VIENTIANE, Laos (AP) — Whatever the outcome of the Paris peace talks, North Victnam will almost certainly be in a position to cause serious trouble for Thalland, Laos and Cambodia when the Vietnam war ends.

Cambodia when the Vietnam war ends.

This is the view of diplomats and military sources in Thailand as well as Laos. These informants say they are disturbed by increasing North Vietnamese influence in the three McKong River countries.

In Laos, where the situation is most serious, North Vietnam has an estimated 48.000 combat troops. They are well trained, well equipped, and can move across the border with relative ease.

Souphanouvong's forces play no active part at the moment in the nominally tripartite neutral government made up of rightists, ne u tr a lists and the Pathet Lao. Souphanouvong's half-brother, Prince Souvanna Phouma, a neutralist, is premier.

But American and other Western supporters of Souvanna's government fear that the Pathet Lao could emerge as the dominant political force after the Vietnam war.

This would give Souphanouvong a strong bargaining position in the eventual over-all settlement of the war, which the United States settlement of the war, which the United States has stipulated must include provisions for Cambodia and Laos. It also would give North Vietnam powerful influence in Laos.

Other sources doubt, however, that Souphanouvong can gain political supremacy. They point out that the Pathet Lao have-by becoming on obvious front for North Vietnamese political and military activity-lost their political credibility as a nationalist movement.

It is conventional wisdom that the North Vietnamese could take all of Laos-except perhaps, Vientiane; in a very few days if they were willing to pay the price.

These political constraints on military action may be even stronger after the war, and for the moment the North Victnamese appear content to operate behind the front of the Pathet Lao and east of the 1962 cease-free line. North Vietnamese domination of the Pathet Lao is having internal effects, too.

ly seems to have awakened to the advisability of student inclusion in the decision-making process, though the matter of how much inclusion is still unsettled.

The Senate is considering changes in its constitution which would allow -students the right to vote in that powerful body, presently composed of faculty members and administration representatives with only token student nonvoting representation on the various Senate committees.

The Senate Committee on Committees and Rules, which is consider the constitutional change, rebuffed the proposal for student inclusion as recently as last June.

IN TURNING DOWN the idea, the committee cited two reasons. The first was that the Senate was constituted only three years ago "after an exhaustive study" and the unanimous adoption of the constitution, by-laws and standing rules, indicating "overwhelming approval of the principles—especially those of composition.

It is ridiculous to think change is uncalled for because the present Senate has been constituted for only three years and the rules were adopted unanimously at that time.

The second reason was even more ridiculous. The committee determined that a conflict of interest could arise if person were voting on academic policy while pursuing a degree at Penn State.

NOT ONLY DID the committee not point out that faculty members mu vote on what they teach, they also failed to foresee the conflict of intercal which would arise in the debate over the term versus the semester system at the next Senate meeting. THE UNIVERSITY SENATE final- be affected as far as salary and research grants were concerned.

Now that the Committee has seen the foolhardiness of these reasons for rejection, there is another matter which needs to be resolved before the Senate earn the honored title "University Senate."

This matter concerns the percentage of representation which students would receive in the true University Senate.

SEVERAL PROPOSALS are being considered by the Committee. The percentages of representation range from 10 per cent (the number of students on Senate committees) to about 30 per cent. These are inadequate.

Students should be allotted 50 per cent of the seats to achieve meaningful representation in a true University Senate. A fair breakdown would have to be worked out. For instance, undergraduates could elect 30 per cent of the Senators according to colleges. Graduate students would be responsible for electing 10 per cent by colleges and the Commonwealth Campuses would be allotted 10 per cent also.

The Administration would keep its 15 per cent representation in order to have a hand in the legislation it would be required to implement, and the faculty would be left with an allocation of 35 per cent of the Senators.

STUDENTS HAVE BEEN fighting for a long time to achieve faculty recognition of their capabilities outside the University classrooms. It has been a bitter fight, uphill all the way until now, when the Senate is finally opening the door a crack.

However, a crack is not good enough. A mere crack will not alleviate the feeling of student impotency at not being included in the decision-making

THE CRACK MUST BE widened, the door must be onened all the way to give students a meaningful hand in the process which directly affects the whole University community.

'The Lion in Winter'

By PAUL SEYDOR Collegian Film Critic

I once had the unforgettable experience of attending a concert of some of Mozart's lighter attending a concert of some of Mozart's lighter salon pieces which the conductor performed as if they were towering statements like Beethoven's Ninth or Wagner's prelude to "Tristan." The poor man was utterly desperate, and the results were wretched, as he shook the music for profundities it just doesn't, have, stretched it to a scale it just couldn't take, heaped on it meanings it just can't and was never meant to support. Not only did he fail to imbue the music with an extrinsic quality, but he almost destroyed its intrinsic quality — its grace and poise and deli-"The moviemakers

But the historical filler is just that—filler—while the play is really nothing more than a clever, trashy domestic squabble, peopled by a family of hideous characters who it's fun to watch bicker because they trade such hilariously nasty invectives. Although as drama the play is hardly the quality of the Mozart pieces as music, it could conceivably be entertaining, in a production scaled to size where the pretender.

hardly the quality of the Mozart pieces as music, it could conceivably be entertaining, in a production scaled to size where the pretentious "serious" stuff is played straight and paced fast to allow the acidic humor to prevail.

But the movie makers treat the play as if it were "King Lear"-cum-Holinshed, as if it were history in the making. Harvey has discovered Panavision and Technicolor and zomar lenses, which he uses to suck you into an environment of real castels and thundering horses and mudy streets and chilly corridors and rolling plains. Now there's nothing wrong with such authenticity of setting if—and it's a big "it"—the subject matter can sustain the historical reverberations touched off. Unfortunately the high-toned and expensive treatment of "The Lion in Winter" only winds up exposing the difficulties of the play, either as history or as a poetic drama.

But they're all so devoted, the se moviemakers, they all seem so serious and solemn, so convinced they're creating an important work of art that we may begin to wonder if we shouldn't take a closer look. The writing itself is literate, with acapital "L." Goldman (like Shapespeare) uses the artifacts of literacy such metaphor, simile, dramatic irony, imagery, symbolism, etc., and (like Sophocles) deals with such "sophisticated" topics as court intrigue, incest and homosexuality and fashions them all into a play of almost inconceivable nonsense. What are we to think when amid all this authenticity of detail and verisimilitude of setting, the quality of metaphor runs along lines like. "Kings, queens and knights everywhere and I'm the only pawn'; or when the level of intellect settles around such smoldering banalities as "In a world where carpenters can get resurrected anything is possible"; or when the imagery features such stupid incongruencies as Henry wandering in out of a stormy night to declare "The sky is pocked with stars."

We're liable to think it's all a fantastic puton and maybe it would be better if it were. I can easily imagine someone with Orson Welles's gigantic sense of humor transforming billiousness and pomposity into a high comic style in order to extract all the potential humor in the disparity between a large-minded production and a small-minded play. This is what Peter O'Toole does with his shouting stomping flailing performance. He carries the gesture of conceit to such an extreme that he manages to stylize it. He's so blatant and obvious that he's almost subtle: only those who are taking the play seriously miss the bulge in his cheek.

manages to stylize it. He's so blatant and obvious that he's almost subtle: only those who are taking the play seriously miss the bulge in his cheek.

And if Harvey and Goldman had a similar flair for irony and could have gotten Katherine Hepburn to stop taking her part so seriously (and to drop that stifling-back-the-tears trick of hers). "The Lion in Winter" might have been a magnificent conquest of style. But they haven't that sense of irony; indeed one suspects that haven't even a sense of humor. And it's apparent neither has much of a cinematic sense. "The Lion in Winter" is possibly the worst example of "opening up" a play that I've ever seen. Whole scenes are broken up or shifted around for no other reason than to establish simultaneous planes of action even at the expense of dramatic sense. Or the characters will often take long walks just to keep the camera moving, the locale shifting. This last practice is not only irritating because we're so aware of its artificiality but it has a way of unscoring the play's talkiness and repetitiveness. In a movie when the scene shifts to a new locale we're accustomed to expecting something new a further development an extension of the action or the meaning. And when it doesn't occur the new setting only throws the old content into greater relief. These characters just walk and walk and walk and talk and talk and talk and talk and walk and walk and when it doesn't occur the new setting only throws the old content into greater relief. These characters is walk and Henry deny their love for the fifth time after asserting it for the fourth you don't care if they ever make up their minds. It's even duller when Harvey dwells on them with loving closeurs because he only diminishes their appeal. These characters are entertaining only because they're so fiendishly hideous; make them sympathetic and decent and you obliterate the only interest they've got.

It would be nice to conclude by saying that the often elegant photography, the lovely landscapes and the occasionally goo an ivory tower when their skills are needed in the very real struggle to maintain a balance of power (which presently is the only factor which guarantees a general peace) is absurd.

On a more mundane level one must consider that whether or not military research continues on the campus it will continue. Thus, if campus research ends we may be well assured that the government will set up costly military research centers of its own, thus diverting much needed funds from domestic programs.

The university becomes absurd if it becomes entangled in ethical red tape that it cannot discern practical realities.

Letters to the Collegian Editor

Now we are all proud of the Penn State football team but we must put things in proper perspective. Let's face it, despite Coach Paterno's protestations, the schedule is indeed a joke. Perennial football powers such as Notre Dame, Texas, etc., would be embarrassed to play Penn State's schedule. It speaks for itself when it is said that West Virginia (UGH!) is our toughest opponent.

Until Penn State begins to play a truly representative schedule, such as Notre Dame plays, it will have to be content to be the best in the East and neither deserves nor should expect any national recognition. Peter J. Kerney

USG: Legitimized Violence?

TO THE EDITOR: In Spring Term of last year the Undergraduate Student Government voted to join the National Student Association, an intercollegiate organization consisting of a union of student governments. Several years ago Penn State withdrew from NSA after a student referendum-what right did USG have to rejoin this organization without another student referendum? USG, at the time of its reentry into NSA, claimed that as the representative of the students it had the right to join without referendum. However, without a referendum, in which students could reveal their opinions on the positions held by NSA, how can the USG state that it truly represents the will of the majority in supporting NSA's position.

Although only student governments are represented in NSA, the positions NSA supports concern the students. For example, NSA has asked for Federal control and inspection of Fraternity admissions and operating standards-has NSA or our USG which has supported Berkeley Riots as "responsible action."

By supporting NSA's position, USG has legitimatized violence as a form of responsible political action at Penn State. If a referendum were held, how many students would agree to this? Therefore, since issues taken up by NSA will affect the students of this camous and not merely USG, the decision for membership in NSA must be left up to those concerned-the students.

political reasons. To this day, his advice has gone unheeded.

Differences of Opinion

The trustees' president, Dr. Abe Azorsky, a California chiropractor, said there was no politics involved in the board's failure to pick a president - only differences of opinion. Those differences have resulted in three controversal votes, all of which were rejected by the State Department of Education.

Some sources close to the situation said the Education Department must share a large portion of the blame. The department last July would not accept a 5-4 vote for George Roadman, the acting president, on grounds it was too close to assure him a good working relationship with the trustees. The board was told to try for a firmer majority for Roadman, or someone else.

The governor's office now admits privately that the 54 vote should have been accepted since it was a clear majority and would have avoided the bizarre events that followed. Even

Lin Root: Distinguished Visiting Professor

No Reason To Leave New York

By JIM WIGGINS Collegian Staff Writer

Collegian Staff Writer

There was absolutely no reason for nationally known writer and scientist Lin Root to leave her home and busy work schedule in New York City to accept a distinguished visiting professorship at the University. After three weeks of teaching here however. Mrs. Root commented about her new role: "I love it." she said. "For me, teaching is an absorbing, enthralling, rowarding experience."

"I'll admit that when I was first contacted about teaching here I just couldn't see leaving my projects in New York to come to Penn State, which is so isolated." she said. "And, since I had never taught before, I had some doubts as to my ability as a professor."

Out of courtesy, Mrs. Root paid a visit to campus, and in her words, "when I realized what a fine academic program exists here and saw that I could offer something to it, I was sold on the idea of becoming a professor."

Many Magazine Articles

Mrs. Root, who has written articles on science and medicine for magazines such as Reader's Digest, Fortune, Cosmopolitan and Collier's, to name a lew, and who was science and medicine editor for Time, is more than qualified to teach Engligh 418, a course on scientific writing open mainly to graduate students.

Mrs. Root, who has a degree in the field of biochemistry, considers herself not so much a scientist as a researcher, who's job it is to dig out scientific facts and correlate them in a readable fashion for general audiences. "I 'm not a journalist in the true sense of the word," she said, "I don't like to work under a deadline. Instead I make use of my scientific background by spending a great deal of time researching a given topic, and then I write about it."

Mrs. Root contends that the role of the science writer is becoming more important in a society that is being increas-netly affected by science and technology. "It is the business of the science writer to keep learning," she said, "because he has the responsibility of accurately informing the general public about innovations in the world of science."

Informing the Public

As a science writer, Mrs. Root has informed the public about a great number of topics ranging from polio to atomic energy. In an article entitled "The Red Atom" in a 1956 issue of Collier's, she uncovered facels about the Soviet nuclear program by gleaning them from interviews and research that were unknown even to the Defense Department.

Having traveled widely. Mrs. Root has written many artiwere unknown even to the Defense Department.

Having traveled widely, Mrs. Root has written many articles of a non-scientific nature about various foreign countries. When askee which country she liked best, she replied, "the last country I've been to. I never go as a tourist," she said, "that's just like looking at picture postcards. You have to go and work with the people," she continued, "only then do you realize how marvelous they are."

In another one of her ventures, Mrs. Root co-authored the play "One Good Year," which starred Arlene Francis and ran on Broadway for nine months. According to Mrs. Root, it was one of her most difficult undertakings.

"After the work was done, it had only just begun," she said. "All during rehearsals we lived on coffee and aspirin, worrying about a laugh here, a new bit of dialogue there. Opening night was agony, not at all romantic and exciting like its supposed to be. I was glad when the thing closed."

Mrs. Root is also the secretary of the Overseas Press Club, a task that requires her to attend periodic meetings in New York. She emphasized the importance of the club as "a watch dog over the world's attitude toward the press." She noted that on many occasions the club has used its influence to insure fair treatment of reporters in countries which have restrictions on the press.

When asked her opinion about students and student activity on campus, Mrs. Root was enthusiastic in her praise, "Students today are channeling their energies and interests into activities which are meaningful," she said. "A decade ago the big thing was panty raids," she continued, "could you imagine a panty raid today?"

Mrs. Root noted that often she stays at her office until 2 a.m. reading the papers that the members of her class here written "They're resumblem;" she said."

2 a.m. reading the papers that the members of her class have written. "They're marvelous," she said, "I pour over them as if I were an editor readying an issue for publication," "I'm trying to meet as many students as I can while I'm here," said Mrs. Root. "the varied backgrounds and outlooks that people have are simply fascinating. My stay here is really paying off," she noted, "I'm having a great time!"

now says the Education Department would be glad to have the 5-4 vote for Roadman back in its hands. Furthermore, hindsight has shown that a 5-4 vote for Roadman, a Democrat, was as good as could be expected from an 8-1 Republican board. The trustees haven't been able to do anything acceptable since the initial vote.

On Sept. 27, someone switched his vote, and the 5-4 vote for Roadman turned into a 5-0 vote for James Kehl, a professor - and a former dean - at the University of Pittsburgh. Four trustees were so upset they refused to vote.

Saying the proceeding was of questionable validity, the Education Department again rejected the board's nomination. Meanwhile, students took to the streets in support of Roadman and the California Faculty Association filed a suit aimed at compelling acceptance of the original 5-4 vote.

Try Again

With such opposition, one might feel that reasonable men wouldn't repeat the same mistake. But last Monday the trustees voted 5-4 for Kehl, and Miller, citing the tense campus situation, told the board to try again.

Now, the legislators are participating in the drama. Rep. A. J. DeMedio (D-Washington) charged that local Republicans were to blame for the whole mess. Rep. Donald O. Bair, (R-Allegheny) says the Democrats are the culprits.

Some Democrats now are asking if some influential Republican went to the Department of Education after the initial Roadman vote and saw to it that the recommendation was not accepted. Bair, in fact, admitted he spoke to Republican State Chairman John C. Jordan about the matter, but said he recommended to the same property of the said the recommendation. but said he never went to the Department of Education Jordan also told the Associated Press, however.

never spoke to anyone in the department about the matter. Hands-Off Policy

"I was contacted by Rep. Bair, and I in turn contacted Fayette County GOP chairman Robert Webster." Jordan said. "Webster's recommendation was to keep a hands-off policy and that's what I did."

Rep. Robert C. Wise, (D-Lycoming) chairman of the House Subcommittee on Higher Education, said a bill before the legislature could solve the whole problem - eventually.

The bill, versions of which have been kicking around for several years, would create a single board of college directors for all 14 state institutions of higher education.

Scating is to be provided either at 4 by 6 foot tables, each with a capacity of four students, in the lounge area or in individual study carrels.

Acoustical controls will be achieved either through the placement of carpeting or sound absorbent materials throughout the library.

The building is to occupy approximately 19,500 square feet of floor space when completed. for all 14 state institutions of higher education.

As it passed the House, however the local boards would be retained, and still would select college presidents. Wise based his optimism on the ground that the statewide board would do a better job than county chairmen of picking trustees - who in turn could do a better job of picking presidents.

Yet, even this bill - which now is before the Senate - would only replace trustees when their terms became vacant. Thus, it would take several years before the complexion of trustees would markedly change, if indeed, they change at all.

Meanwhile, the politicians still retain their influence in the state college system. And California still has no president.

Cyclamates To Leave Market; News Sours Weight-Watchers

By BARBI STINE and GARY MAYK

Of The Daily Collegian Staff

The sugar substitutes that made life so sweet for many The sugar substitutes that made life so sweet for many weight-watching Americans are about to leave the scene.

According to Robert H. Finch, secretary of health, education and welfare, all food products containing the artificial sweetner cyclamate must be phased from the market by Feb. 1, 1970. The deadline for removal of soft drinks is Jan. 1, while drugs containing the substance may be sold until July 1.

The responsing behind the government has a substance in the substance may be sold until July 1.

Jan. 1, while drugs containing the substance may be sold until July 1.

The reasoning behind the government ban is a possible link between cyclamates and cancer. Tests conducted demonstrated that rats injected with the substance developed cancer and also showed an abnormal number of broken chromosomes in the blood and reproductive cells.

With the release of the government report came an immediate reaction by cyclamate consumers. The prevalent opinion at the University was expressed by Jackie Stanley (1st-psychology-Bingingham, N.Y.) when she admitted she was discontinuing the use of dictary soft drinks. "I won't use something that isn't good for me," she explained, adding that "no one really knows enough about it."

Some Stop Using Cyclamates

Another coed, Joyce Wellde, (7th-political science-Annandale, Va.) agreed, "I stopped using it last year after I read the report in Time that it might be bad for you. Actually I only used the sugar substitute about twice a week in my tea, but now I just 'borrow' sugar from the cafeteria."

In State College most housewives already have halted the use of artificial sweetners. Mrs. Kent Forster, 912 W. Fairmont Ave., previously bought the dietetic soft drinks for her children to cut down on their sugar make as well as trips to the dentist.

"We received information prior to the Saturday report."

children to cut down on their sugar make as well as trips to the dentist.

"We received information prior to the Saturday report banning the sweeteners and decided to stop," she explained.
"We are rather betwixt-and-between now. I'm not sure which is worse, the cyclamates or the regular sodas."

When asked if she would approve of a satisfactory substitute she was undecided. "I think the best solution is not to drink any soda pop at all." she said.

A contrasting opinion was voiced by University employee, Nancy Holt, Nittany Gardens. "I don't drink enough to hurt me, and they gave that rat pretty much of an overdose," she said, referring to the rats used in cyclamate research. "I still linend to use them as long as they are on the market," she adintend to use them as long as they are on the market," she ad-

The ban did not constitute quite so large a disturbance among the male population at the University. Doug Sitler (4th-engineering-Berwick) shrugged and said, "Personally, I never did like it. I've drunk some, (in place of sugar) but it's not so good as sugar. I'm a 100 per cent sugar man, myself. In everything I tried I had to use half the bottle instead of one or two drops.

He added that "the funny part is my mother's on a diet.

She used the pre-sweetened stuff, so now she has to go back to

The phasing out of the product in State College has already begun. Robert C. Proffitt, assistant director of food and housing services, explained, that artificial sweeteners are not used in preparing food for the dining halls.

Wending Machines Affected

Vending Machines Affected

"The only area affected is the vending machines where, upon request, we have stocked dietetic soft drinks." he said. The vending machines are located predominately in women's residence halls.

"We definitely don't plan to buy anymore of the low calorie soft drinks listed in the paper as being harmful or containing cyclamates," Proffitt continued.

He added that Food and Housing Services is notifying manufacturers by letter of their order cancellations in "a few days to a week."

As soon as the present machine supply is gone that "will be the end of it," he said.

Proffit was uncertain what the result would be. He thought possibly a few slots in the vending machines would be empty unless the manufacturers came up with a "suitable substitute" in the near future. He indicated that returns from the dietetic soda were never very profitable and were sold at substitute" in the near future. He indicated that returns from the dietetic soda were never very profitable and were sold at the University "only as a result of demand."

Some stores in the State College area already have begun to remove the products from the shelves, while others are waiting for orders from area headquarters or for the manufacturers to initiate action. Most have stopped all further orders of cyclamate foods and plan to sell only what is currently in stock.

Ed Gotschaal, manager of the A&P Supermarket at 1910 N. Atherton St., has discontinued sales of some of the products, but is awaiting further instructions. He explained that, although the market for the products was growing, the public would probably be afraid to buy anything left on shelves until the deadling date.

A representative of the A&P stores regional office in Altona said all A&P stores will comply with the government ruling. But, for now, he feels it is too early for immediate action in removing products from the shelves.

Cyclamates Remain on Shelves

McLanahan's Self-Service Center is still selling its dictetic foods and will continue to do so until the food companies remove them, presumably before Feb. 1. Asked about discontinuing sales, a spokesman at McLanahan's said, "There's nothing we can do. It's only fair if they're harmful to your health: of course, you don't know the full story."

Speaking out against cyclamate products, R. R. Ripka, owner of Boot's Dairyette, 138 W. Beaver Ave., expressed his concern over the length of time given to merchants for emptying their shelves of a dangerous product.

"T've known about it for at least ten years," he said. "I knew they put poison in all that stuff. The companies put it in here. I don't carry a lot in the diet line, but sales slowed down."

down."

Sales of diet products at Tasty Spot, 326 E. College Ave., have not been affected according to Don Stover. "The announcement had a slight effect." he said, but "most either haven't heard about it or don't care. We're waiting for the companies to take action, but have stooped orders. Most products should be replaced immediately."

Stover added that he personalty does not like artificially sweetened beverages because of the aftertaste.

Fortunately for the remaining diet conscious individuals bemoaning the loss of precious low calorie snacks at the University, top manufacturers of the artifically sweetened sodas and foods already are working on sugar-free substitutes to replace the cyclamates.

sodias and foods already are working on sugar-free substitutes to replace the cyclamates.

Speculation concerning the effects of cyclamates began earlier in the year with the report by a special committee of the National Academy of Sciences which recommended a maximum daily adult consumption of 5.0 grams por day and 1.35 grams for children. The Federal Drug Administration has revised the limitation, establishing it at 3.5 grams per day for an adult and 1.2 grams for children. There are, on the average, .25-1.0 grams of cyclamate per 12-ounce bottle of dietetic soft drink. These figures, however, are not always printed on the drink. These figures, however, are not always printed on the Abbott Laboratories, the nation's largest producer of cyclamates originally had denied all criticism of cyclamate. At their Chicago seminar last month, 200 industrial users of artificial sweeteners attended the conference in which 10 of Abbotts' best scientists discussed the results of the cyclamate testing. Karl M. Beck, Abbott planning manager, disclaimed any relation between oral cyclamate consumption in man and animals.

Abbot Reverses Position

Last week, however, Abbott Laboratories reversed their position when they provided the FDA with information causing doubt as to the safeness of the artificial sweetener. Cyclamate has 30 times the sweetening power of sugar yet.

cyclamate has 30 times the sweetening power of sugar yet contains no futening calories. As the result, it has been used widely in sweetening dictetic foods such as soft drinks, canned fruits, ice cream, salad dressings, baked goods, candies and pure sugar substitutes. Soft drinks account for 70 per cent of these products.

The sale of dietary products involved a billion dollar a year market. The sale of cyclamate-based products, particularly soft drinks, has been expanding in the State College area in recent years. Their popularity has increased rapidly, the majority of the consumers being comprised of teenage girls and older women whose favorite pastime is "going on a diet."

Bobcats Stalk Penn State

By DON McKEE Collegian Sports Editor

Penn State goes into its sixth consecutive "big" game today at 1:30 n.m. before its fifth straight sellout crowd. No, it's not State's biggest game, but once more an opponent can make fame, fortune and its entire season by beating the Lions.

The Ohio Bobcats will join Kansas State, West Virginia and Syracuse as teams that hope to jump to major status by upsetting Penn State. And that's what it would be-a

The Bobcats shot at football immortality most likely went by the boards last week with Cleve Bryant's right knee. The preseason All-American quarterback damaged ligaments in Ohio's 24-21 loss to Miami (Ohio) last week. Bobcat coach Bill Hess has already announced that he will start junior Steve Skiver. Bryant is not expected to play.

The loss is a severe dent to Ohio's hopes because Bryant is one of the best passers in the country. He also had a great solit end in Todd Snyder, a senior who has hauled in 37 passes already. The Bobcat passing attach is geared to a long bomb on almost every series and Bryant might have given State's secondary some problems. Skiver is a good passer, but doesn't have Bryant's running ability and the Lion pass defense should have an easier time with him.

States offense might have a chance to get into high gear today, because the Bobcats aren't noted defensive giants and because the Lions stable of running backs is rounding into great shape.

The super soph tandem of halfback Ramich has a shoulder injury and will not Lydell Mitchell and fullback Franco Harris play). has given the Lions incredible depth in the backfield. Charlie Pittman is back to top shape and should be ready for a typical Charlie Pittman day, which means 100-plus yards and a couple of touchdowns. Don Abbey, Gary Deuel and Fran Ganter insure Joe Paterno a fresh supply of offensive muscle on practically every play. (Halfback Joel ter of how big a score State will get.

play).

If Bryant should be able to play today. at anywhere near full strength, it could be an exciting game. But with the strength State's defense has exhibited in it's last two outings (a shutout of West Virginia and a 15-14 squeaker over Syracuse) the Lions should wear Ohio down. Then it will just be a mat-

Lions, Hoyas Race Today

By JAY FINEGAN Collegian Sports Writer

The afternoon was warm and muggy. It was early in June and most freshmen were nestled away in Pattee or planted alongside a bush or a budding tree getting ready for the onslaught of examinations that was to come shortly.

Beaver Stadium presented a far different picture, however. A light rain had begun to depress the already vacant stands. The weather was the thick, steamy kind, the type of day when you could lose five pounds just getting out of bed. Through the haze ran two figures

If you had seen any freshmen track tilts you would know this pair by name. They had established themselves as the State trackmen, distance runners to be more precise, to look for the three years to come. Greg Fredericks and Jerry Henderson perhaps were also aware of the confidence and hope they represented for others.

Distance runners know what it means to pay the price for something they want very badly. They pay it every day. This afternoon, runners from State will compare price tags with a team from Georgetown.

The Lions have beaten three opponents this season and have decisively beaten two of them. Villanova, the third, left State thinking about a 19-41 defeat.

Georgetown also lost to the powerful Wildcats. 17-42, and claims its sole victory against respectable William and Mary, 18-50.

The Hoyas rely heavily on the telent of Garth McKay and Sam Gray, a notable due that led the way in both of Georgetown's meets so far. State looks to Henderson and Fredericks, along with co-captains Jim Dixon and Jeff Deardorff, Ralph Kissel, Matt Chadwick and Jimmy Miller also have been placing for the Lions.

Today's competition gets under way at 11 o'clock on the five mile course which borders and crosses the golf course. The freshmen are starting at 10:30.

Today's setting will be far different from the one we just saw at Beaver Stadium in June. Thermometers will read about 50 degrees closer to the zero stripe. Dead leaves will crackle underfoot instead of the plush softness of moist, emerald grass, glad to be back on the scene after a dead winter. Instead of a hot rain, there may be a soft snow falling. But the men will be the same.

This morning on a manicured golf course then, two contending sophomores, Greg Fredericks and Jerry Henderson, will stand nervously before the starting gun and ask themselves if all the sweat and pain were worth it. Five miles later, the Georgetown Hoyas will know the answer.

Pittsburgh May Start Hanratty

PITTSBURGH (AP) - Terry Hanratty's wife was an English major but she doesn't have enough material yet to write a book about her husband, the quarterback.

But the Pittsburgh Steelers' second draft choice may ask his wife to begin taking notes Sunday for a sequel to Mrs. Fran Tarkenton's book on the New York Giants' quarterback.

Hanratty could get his first chance to start a professional football game against Vince Lombardi's Washington Redskins but Coach Chuck Noll, admitting Hanratty's a possible starter, won't say for sure what his decision will be.

Quarterback Dick Shiner, who suffered a badly brunsed larynx against the Browns, last week wont play. And that reduces Noll's choices to Hanratty or Kent Nix.

The Steelers, I-4, and resting in the Century Division basement, have played sparkling defensive football especially against the owns and Giants.

But the offense has sputtered and stuttered, allowing Steelers opponents to turn mistakes into touchdowns.
