USSR Celebrates 52nd Anniversary

MOSCOW — The Soviet Union celebrated its 52nd year of Communist rule yesterday with its annual Red Square display of military might and a sterner Kremlin attitude toward the United States.

Marshal Andrei A. Grechko, Soviet defense minister, accused the United States of aggression in Vietnam in his address to the nation from the top of Lenin's tomb. Overlooking troops massed on the square below, he declared: "The whole world now sees the hopelessness of the aggression of ruling circles of the United States of America in Vietnam."

Criticism of the United States was thus restored to the defense minister's annual anniversary speech. Last year it had been notably omitted, reflecting an apparent wait-and-see attitude on the part of the Kremlin toward then newly elected President Nixon.

V.C. Launch Saigon Ground Attacks

SAIGON — Government outposts on the fringes of this South Vietnamese capital of more than two million were reinforced yesterday after the first significant ground attacks on Saigon's defenses since May, 1968.

In the city itself, Viet Cong agents failed in daring assassination attempts against a South Vietnamese Cabinet member.

Northwest of the capital, North Vietnamese troops massed along the Cambodian border assaulted a government militia post yesterday, and shot down two helicopters near a special Forces camp they had shelled Thursday.

Scattered clashes were reported elsewhere in a 150-mile-long sector stretching along the Cambodian border into the central highlands. The allied command reported 68 enemy rocket and mortar attacks across the country during the past 24 hours.

Mansfield Endorses Nixon Peace Plans

WASHINGTON — Senate Democratic Leader Mike Mansfield joined 39 other senators yesterday in sponsoring a resolution supporting President Nixon's peace efforts and calling for a mutual cease-fire in Vietnam. But he ruled out any hurry-up procedures for a vote.

"It's not going to be pushed through," the Montana Democrat told reporters shortly before he joined Republican Leader Hugh Scott of Pennsylvania in formally presenting the resolution.

The resolution is similar to one approved Thursday by the House Foreign Affairs Committee except that it has the added call for a mutual cease-fire.

A vote on the House resolution is expected next week, possibly before start of fresh antiwar demonstrations in the capital on Nov. 15.

Meat Packers May Get Extra Time

WASHINGTON — Government sources say the Nixon administration may be on the verge of supporting an amendment to the 1967 Wholesome Meat Act to give 16,000 interstate packers more time to clean up their operations.

The law says all meat plants must begin operating under strict inspection procedures at least equal to federal standards by Dec. 15, 1969, but the Agriculture Department says no state has been certified as having met the requirements.

The Small Business Administration was deluged by loan applications from meat-plant operators in 1968 for money to update facilities. More than $8.7 million in SBA-backed loans were made last year to these operators, a spokesman said.

However, meat-plant loans this year have dwindled to less than half the 1968 rate, mostly because of tighter money policies. But the spokesman said part of the decline is because of word circulating that "the heat's off" for compliance with the inspection law this year.

Nixon Requests More Air Controllers

GRAND CAY, Bahamas — President Nixon appealed to Congress yesterday to authorize hiring of 1,000 more air traffic controllers and then flew by helicopter to the Bahamas for an overnight stay.

Nixon made an urgent request for more air traffic controllers he said are vitally needed to speed air travel and prevent collisions.

He said they should be put on the payrolls for the current fiscal year in addition to 2,800 traffic controllers already included in the Transportation Department's 1970 budget. These are the men and women who have the prime responsibility for speeding air traffic "and for preventing mid-air collision," Nixon said in a letter sent from his Florida vacation home to the leaders of Congress.

A total of 22,000 air controllers now are on duty in the nation's airports.

Westinghouse Workers Plan Walkout

PITTSBURGH — Local unions representing about 77,000 Westinghouse Electric Corp. workers nationwide hurried strike preparations over the weekend fully expecting that the contract agreement will be reached by a midnight tomorrow deadline.

"We have no intention of asking for a contract extension," a spokesman for the International Union of Electrical Workers said yesterday.

"We are making strike preparations," he said. "Signs are being painted and pickets are being scheduled."

Speaks on Progressive Education

Colloquy Hears Bean

By LINDA OLSHESKY

Colloquy keynote speaker

Orson Bean said last night that most American schools are not ready for progressive education.

Bean, founder of the Fifteenth Street School in New York City, said that educational reform must be evolutionary. Otherwise, he said, it would be like "giving a starving man a steak when what he needs is a cup of broth."

"All grammar schools cannot work this way," Bean said. "If the students were suddenly given this freedom, anarchy would result. Windows would be broken and the school completely demolished."

"A child in the traditional grammar school cannot be given this freedom because he won't know how to react to it," Bean added.

Finding present schools inadequate, Bean began his own school with three teachers, 30 children and one janitor. Bean explained that at the Fifteenth Street School children are given freedom to the extent that they can handle it responsibly.

"We have rules based on health, safety and respect of the rights of others," Bean said. "As soon as one person steps on someone else's toes his rights stop and someone else's begin."

Bean described the school as a perfect example of democracy in action. "The school is a living example to the kids that their rights are interlaced with the rights of others."

Bean explained that the children have the right not to come to class but they do not have the right to come to class and not do the work or disrupt the other students.

"Every child would not be able to function in an environment like this. Only happy, healthy children who would perform in any school are selected. In our school they flourish," Bean said.

Bean explained that his school is "naturally limited" by the substantial cost of education in the number of students that can accept.

"I have no interest in dealing with the urban problems of the ghetto nor in educating those difficult to educate because of their backgrounds," Bean added.

Bean explained the school does not include many lower class children because they have been raised in a "totalitarian environment." As a result of their upbringing these children would not react well in a free-structured school, Bean said.

To implement changes in the University, Bean advised students to pressure for specific changes. Bean added that changes must be made within the existing framework.

Colloquy continues today with a series of workshops. Scheduled for 1 p.m. in the Pollock Union Building Lounge — Authority and Learning; Waring Lounge — Making the University a More Meaningful Place; Beaver Hall Reading Room — Stratification Among Students and Faculty; Mifflin Main Lobby — Students Need a Bill of Rights.

Planned for 3 p.m. in Waring Lounge — Gaining a Sense of Identity Within the Mass Society of the University; Waring Lounge — Men's Relationship to Life as an Educational Goal; Simmons Piano Lounge — Relationships

Says No Dialogue in 'Setting of Confrontation'

Walker Will Not Meet BSU

University President Eric A. Walker yesterday said that he would not meet with members of the Black Student Union on Monday as they had requested, and that he would be out of town on that day.

Walker left the door open for future meetings by saying that he still wanted to meet with the BSU, but not under the "confrontation" setting he feared would be created at the Monday meeting, which the BSU had set for 7:30 p.m. in 121 Sparks.

Officials of the University Office of Public Information said the Walker statement spoke for the whole administration.

Other administrators invited to the meeting include Provost J. Ralph Rackley, Vice President for Resident Instruction Paul M. Althouse, Dean of Students Raymond O. Murphy, Director of Admissions T. Sherman Stanford and Vice President for Student Affairs Charles L. Lewis.

A check in Old Main yesterday showed that Lewis, Rackley and Althouse were out of town for the weekend, and could not be reached for comment.

Murphy said that he "could not imagine why they would want to meet with me since President Walker won't be there." He said he had not been formally requested to be present, but if the BSU asked him, he would "consider the invitation."

The Dean of Students said that as of last night, he was not planning to attend the BSU meeting.

Stanford said yesterday afternoon that he did not know whether he would attend because he had not seen the Walker statement. Later attempts to contact him were futile.

The text of the Walker statement follows:

"I have been asked through a press release to meet with members of the Black Student Union under conditions that would demean the Office of the President of The Pennsylvania State University and subject it to pressure groups that soon would render it ineffectual.

I do not intend to do so.

At the same time, I want to emphasize that we have been and are attempting to open lines of communications to black students. But a setting of confrontation is not the place for a two-way dialogue. Nor is Monday evening (Nov. 10) the time—I have had longstanding plans to attend the national meeting of the State University and Land-Grant College Association.

I repeat what I have said many times before. We are anxious to meet with black students and faculty on a mutually agreed-upon place, time and meeting structure.

Let me try to set out my thinking and my concern for the present situation.

Since the events which took place during halftime of the football game last Saturday, I have received numerous letters and telephone calls. All of these messages have complained to me about the content of the message, and a few even condemned me personally for allowing time for the message to be read.

Opportunities For Blacks

In retrospect, I still believe it was proper to allow time for black students to make a presentation. Members of the administration who worked long and hard with black students in setting up the time also feel this way. We feel that it was an opportunity for black students to communicate to a large and diverse audience. It was an opportunity to enhance black aspirations, to offer explanations of black programs, problems and requests. It was, we felt, an opportunity to provide some answers, to offer means of overcoming problems and an opportunity for the movement to gain more supporters.

While the conduct of those on the field was praise-worthy, the content of the message delivered was a great disappointment to me, and I know to many, many others who had worked to aid the cause.

It not only contained some distortion of history, but also many erroneous statements concerning Penn State.

Since that presentation, a news release issued on Nov. 3, on the letterhead of the Black Student Union, has, in effect, demanded that I and members of my staff attend a meeting to "explain" the charges made in the half-time ceremony. Since I do not believe the accuracy of many of the charges, I see no need to account for them.

A subsequent release on the letterhead of the Black Student Union on Nov. 5, goes beyond the bounds of a legitimate news release by using abusive language on a member of my staff, while at the same time calling for a meeting with other members.

No regular channels had been used by any member of this group to request me or members of my staff to meet before the news releases were issued.

Again, I repeat that I will meet with members of the Black Community in an attempt to aid them in their own progress. And I think we have made progress as a result of past meetings, even though it had not been as much as Black students would have desired. We have made the most significant progress by working together.

For example, black enrollment in the University now includes approximately 550 students at University Park, 285 regularly enrolled students at the Commonwealth Campuses and an additional 365 in evening or continuing education credit courses. Although this is short of expectations, I make the point that we did not succeed in increasing enrollment significantly until concerned black students began to accompany our Admissions Office personnel to high schools to talk with prospective black students. This effort has been greatly strengthened by the addition of black professional personnel who are now visiting predominantly black high schools in the Commonwealth to encourage enrollment at Penn State.

Black Cultural Center

Black students have asked for a separate Black Cultural Center. We realize this is a needed facility, and University attorneys are now working with the black community to establish a non-profit corporation to create and manage such a center. I have pledged myself to help provide funds to support it. This is another instance of working together.

The success of the Black Arts Festival last Spring pointed up the great value of providing black students opportunities for self-expression and identification.

The need for more black faculty and staff is clearly recognized. At the present time, the University Park campus numbers about 30 such individuals, and we hope to build this number. A critical shortage exists, but we have been reluctant to raid predominantly black colleges for faculty members because the need is great there, too. In this connection, I am especially pleased that we have more than 100 black graduate students. A rapid increase in the number of college and university teachers and staff members is urgent.

We have not been able to solve one of the most critical problems of all, namely, that of finding extensive new funds. The point is often made that we have money for mushroom research, but not for black students. The budget item for mushroom research is earmarked for that purpose alone by the Legislature; to use it for any other purpose would be a clear violation of the law. The same is true of other earmarked funds.

The general appropriation for the University from the Legislature is used to subsidize the education of all students and is not available for any specific group of students. We badly need additional funds, both public and private, for black students. In this connection, 40 per cent of all University students qualify for financial assistance on the basis of need. I should add, in passing, that we have given aid to black students while having to deny it to equally needy White students.

In the other area where progress is most difficult, that is, in the addition of larger numbers of black students, I have asked the University Senate to examine its policy to see whether, in fact, changes in admissions policies to give preference to blacks in admission should be made. Initial policies in admissions procedures are made by the Senate rather than the University Administration.

The drive for equal rights for all citizens, in particular those in minority groups who have historically been denied these rights, is the most compelling ethic of our time. I share

BSU Plans Meeting: Disagrees With Prexy

By MARGE COHEN
Collegian Feature Editor

Spokesman for the Black Student Union said last night that BSU members will be waiting for University administrators at 7:30 p.m. Monday in 121 Sparks as announced Monday.

Despite University President Eric A. Walker's refusal to attend the meeting, the black students will be in Sparks, waiting to meet with other invited administrators.

In a statement released yesterday, Walker said he would not attend the meeting and thereby "subject the Office of the President" to "pressure groups that would soon render it ineffectual."

Walker further stated that he "had long-standing plans to attend the national meeting of the State University and Land-Grant College Association."

But, Vince Benson, BSU political chairman, and Ken Waters, BSU cultural chairman, said they resented some of the implications and tone of Walker's statement.

The idea of "confrontation" that Walker interjects throughout the statement, they agreed, is "Walker's projection of Walker."

In Monday's press release on the meeting sent to Walker, Paul M. Althouse, vice president for resident instruction; T. Sherman Stanford, director of admissions; J. Ralph Rackley, provost and Raymond

O. Murphy, dean of students the black students wrote: "...at 7:30 p.m. Monday, Nov. 10 we will be waiting for these gentlemen to appear at 121 Sparks..." The names followed.

"How, through any release—public or private—can he interpret this as confrontation?" Benson asked. "Walker sees this as confrontation. Members of the BSU do not consider it a confrontation," he continued. "It is a meeting to discuss issues."

The idea of "confrontation" appears in the third paragraph of Walker's statement.

'Conditions that Demean'

But, referring to the first paragraph of the speech, in which Walker notes "conditions that would demean the Office of the President...and subject it to pressure groups," Benson said Walker failed to appreciate the BSU perspective.

He explained that Walker "was talking about things from our perspective."

"It is 'demeaning' for his office to discuss things from the BSU perspective," he continued, adding, "not to mention the idea of pressure groups."

"Serve the People" Benson pointed out that under American pluralism lies a base for pressure groups and interest groups as means by which officials "serve the people."

Benson also noted Walker's reference to "confrontation" and how the President recalled "we have made the most significant progress by working together."

To this, Benson replied that "working together" has resulted in the past from confrontation—from May 1968 through January, 1969.

"This was only a request for a meeting," Benson said. "Working together did not take place until there was confrontation," he added.

'Walker Contradictory'

Benson and Waters, however, took exception to this. "If Walker is to endorse Black aspirations, why should he be disappointed in the expression of black aspirations that took place Nov. 1?"

'Move Flexible'

"We felt that by sending a press release, the University would be in a more flexible position for response, due to the informality of the release. However, the University's failure to respond to date has put the BSU in the regrettable position of having to reiterate in a more formal manner that members of the BSU will be waiting at the above mentioned place, at the above mentioned time."

The letter was signed by J. Raleigh Demby, BSU communications chairman. Copies were sent to administrators mentioned in the release as well as to Charles L. Lewis, vice president for student affairs.

Benson also noted Walker's references to "confrontation" and how the President recalled "we have made the most significant progress by working together."

'Only a Request'

To this, Benson replied that "working together" has resulted in the past from confrontation—from May 1968 through January, 1969.

"This was only a request for a meeting," Benson said. "Working together did not take place until there was confrontation," he added.

Prexy, BSU Disagree

LAST SATURDAY the Black Student Union requested to meet with University President Eric A. Walker. Yesterday Walker turned down the request, saying he would not meet in a 'setting of confrontation.'

USG Executives To Stand Firm On Court's Unseating of Myers

By STEVE SOLOMON
Collegian Staff Writer

The executive branch of the Undergraduate Student Government said yesterday that it would uphold the decision of the Supreme Court to disqualify elected Town Congressman Joe Myers.

"The Executive will stick by the Constitution, which says that the Supreme Court has the last jurisdiction," Ted Thompson, USG president, said.

The decision was reached in a midnight meeting of Thompson, Vice President Lynn Arbittier and Treasurer Ted Izkowitz after a stormy debate in the USG meeting Thursday night threatened USG with a constitutional crisis.

The crisis grew out of the Court's ruling on Tuesday which denied Myers a seat because of his "secondary affiliations." Myers had placed second in an eight-seat race for two representation, but accepted a bid from Zeta Beta Tau fraternity around the time of his certification.

The Court ruled that an elected congressman must "remain affiliated with his respective area up to the time of, as well as after certification." Congress objected that the decision set a precedent which would jeopardize each member's status, since the Court allegedly ruled on a congressman and not a candidate. Only Congress can initiate action against one of its members.

Chief Justice Harry Hill and Justice Bob Brumley, who defended the Court's decision at the meeting, said that in this case they had interpreted the USG Constitution to mean that Myers was never a congressman. They said Myers' intent was to become a pledge at the fraternity even as he ran for a town seat.

Statements pinning down the exact time of Myers' acceptance of the bid were conflicting.

Mens' Residence Council President Bob Shaffer, who led the attack against the Court, said that "every one of our own seats is in jeopardy by the ruling of the Court."

"Congress cannot create any legislative ruling that would put my (Myers) into a congressional seat," Brinkley told The Daily Collegian.

Thompson indicated yesterday that he will enforce the decision to disqualify Myers, despite his power to ignore the Court's order.

"The Congress doesn't understand the Constitution," Thompson said. "They feel that the Supreme Court has overstepped its bounds. But it has no bounds until Congress draws up legislation to limit its jurisdiction."

"The executive will take a definite position supporting the Court and then explain its position as completely as possible," Thompson continued. "Then we'll just wait to see what the reaction will be from Congress."

USG officers believe that reaction will come in the form of legislation restricting the jurisdiction of the Court in future cases.

system of checks and balances we now have in USG," Thompson said.

Hill said yesterday, however, that some legislation actually would be beneficial.

"If the legislation defines the bounds in which the Court may operate, then I think it's good," Hill said. "But if Congress passes something preposterous, then the Court would have to rule it unconstitutional. If not, it would leave the Court with an amputated arm."

Hill said that just the latter debate in the USG meeting hurt the prestige of the Court immeasurably.

"The humiliation of the Supreme Court in front of USG was probably the biggest mistake Congress ever made," Hill said. "If this continues, we might just as well end USG. It's going to take a lot to rebuild the support and respect that USG and the Court had before the incident."

The mood of Congress was reflected in the vote for president pro tempore, largely a coordinating position. Myers, who was nominated but ruled off the ballot, received 15 votes, to ten for John Buesinger, who was supported by Thompson.

Thompson announced the results, but did not declare Myers the winner. He said the decision would be deferred until Myers' status was cleared.

Thompson said that Congress inadvertently may have recognized the decision of the Court when it raised no objections to the swearing in of Walter Gronzkow, who took Myers' seat.

Thompson said that Congress "was creating its own confusion" from this inconsistency.

ORSON BEAN, Colloquy keynote speaker, spoke last night on progressive education in America. Colloquy programs continue throughout the day.

After USG Grows Up

CAPITOL HILL HAS withstood Moratorium marches and even two Nixon administrations. In the mid-1980's a bizarre political trend has moved into Congress a band of young legislators, all former Penn State students, and all of whom served on the Undergraduate Student Government Congress during the 1969-70 year.

At a joint session of Congress, and in the temporary absence of Speaker Theodore Q. Thompson, Vice President Aron "Spiro" Q. Arbittier presided. During some heated debate over the seating of Joey "the Greek" Myers, Arbittier showed his usual tact, diplomacy and all-around friendliness as he admonished Sen. Thomas Stillitano to "shut the hell up or I'll throw you out... bodily!"

As the hall quieted, Sen. Teddy Itzkowitz rose from his chair, and, running his hand through his long, wavy gray hair, began to read every name in the metropolitan Washington D.C. telephone directory. "They're potential congressmen," he explained. As he did this, rows of senators began filing from the chamber, paper cups of coke in their hands, grossly insulted by the action of Sen. Itzkowitz.

WITH ALL THE legislators, spectators and newsmen in the gallery in an uproar, Sen. Lynne "Schoolmarm" Moeller took the floor and scolded the group for its childish behavior. She then marched up and down the rows of desks, slapping wrathfully with her ruler the wrists of some and washing out with soap the mouths of other legislators, whichever was appropriate for the particular offense.

Indignancy Committee Chairman Sen. Robert "Straight Shooter" Shafer rose to his feet, patting former Sen. Myers on the head and saying, "There, there Joe," and told Speaker Thompson, who just returned to the chamber, "If, Mr. Chairman, the chair will not recognize the consensus of the congress, then, sir, this is one congressman who will, indeed, not recognize the chair. I mean, there are some black and white facts here."

As substitute Sen. David Harris spun around and glared, Sen. Shafer immediately blushed and said that he apologized to the chair for the unfortunate word choice.

WHILE ALL THIS continued, and ushers and MRC visitors were sent downstairs for lemon blends and cherry cokes, Sen. Myers huddled with barrister Donald Paule and Sen. Stillitano, pounding out another of their amazing parliamentary coups in order to reseal Sen. Myers.

During the discussion, Myers apologized eight times for being nervous, but Paule told him not to worry about it, and "after all, we're your friends, and if we can't tell you about it, who can?"

After a few hours, the tone of the debate turned toward Congress' power in relation to the Supreme Court, whose decision had unseated Myers for his affiliation with a fraternal group which was supposedly a front for a bowling ball concern.

TEARS POURING down her freckled face, Sen. Theresa Borio attacked the court's right to void the certification of a congressman because of another affiliation.

"I realize that my seat, too, is now in jeopardy," she said. "After all, I am my neighborhood's representative to the Greater Washington Association of Lady African Violet Raisers."

Congress fell silent as it realized the gravity of her point.

In an eleventh hour move, Supreme Court Chief Justice Harry Hill bolted into the room, his black robes flowing, and threw his powdered wig to the floor. Still in a rage, he attempted to defend the Bar against the forensic assault from Congress.

SEN. BUTTONMAN, reputed to have interests in button and graffiti manufacturing firms in his home district, also took potshots at the apparent discrepancy in the Constitution regarding the powers of the Court and the seating of Congressmen.

As the tension mounted, Parliamentarian Thomas Ritchey began paging frantically through the Constitution and his personalized editions of "Roberts Rules of Order" and "Hoyle's Book of Game Rules: With Directions and Explanations for Indoor Games of Skill and Chance, With a Device on Skillful Play."

Sen. Nina Comly then leaped on her desk top, and swinging her rhetorical machete, said, "Mr. Speaker, Congress is apparently turning against you. There's nothing personal in this, but you did stand one of my best friends up for a date on a really big weekend two years ago. I mean, some things are right and some are wrong, and Senators Shafer, Moeller and Myers will agree with me."

As debate became more mucky, Speaker Thompson discarded his tie and sportcoat and, working at his "I visited New York City" cufflinks, clearly feared the meeting would last all night. Sen. Itzkowitz inadvertently came to the rescue when, although he was only up to the "D's", he discarded the telephone book and began reading from the television listings.

When the Congressmen heard that "The Bobbsey Twins Go to Cape May" was on the Late Show that night, they quickly moved, seconded and passed an adjournment motion and sprinted from the chambers.

'Stolen Kisses' Flimsy Romance

By PAUL SEYDOR
 Collegian Film Critic

Francois Truffaut's "Stolen Kisses" (now at Twelvetees) is a flimsy farcical romance that wouldn't be worth discussing if it didn't afford the opportunity of reconstructing a career that began with a couple of blinding flashes of genius but thereafter could hardly generate a few sparks. An inquiry into the why and how might be instructive.

In one way or another Truffaut has spent most of his artistic life paying tribute, an activity which, I think, has been the boon and that with a return to the bene of his material that was, at the Piano Player, least, close to him, er" (1959), based on the grade-B American gangster pictures he loved so much as a child, was a crime-melodrama with an existential twist.

If it was a near-masterpiece, then "Jules and Jim," his next film (1962), was indisputably the genuine article. A glorious celebration of the pre-World War I French Bohemians, it was an homage to the inventive manner of D. W. Griffith and to the humanistic matter of Jean Renoir, the two directors whose work most influenced Truffaut's own work. Appearing a time when most movies were stale, inert, and depleted, "Shoot the Piano Player" and "Jules and Jim," so fresh in style new in technique, and original in conception seemed to open up whole new vistas of creative possibilities.

Truffaut never seemed to try to realize those possibilities or his great potential. His first "big" movie to follow "Jules and Jim" was a clumsy adaptation of Ray Bradbury's outrageously overrated neo-Orwellian fantasy about book-burning, "Fahrenheit 451."

The movie puzzled many Truffaut admirers, not just because his style seemed inexplicably cramped, stolid, and awkward but that the material was so (literally and figuratively) foreign to him. Why did he bother with it?

The answer was to be found in his long-standing admiration for Alfred Hitchcock, which grew into an obsession. The French "New Wave" directors (Truffaut, Godard, Chabrol, Resnais, et al.) venerate Hitchcock almost to the point of canonization. Throughout his work they see a consistency of approach (a "style") and a similarity of theme (a "philosophy," probably vaguely existential) that, for them, qualify him as an "auteur" (the directorial equivalent to a great author).

Although I am well aware of the esteem in which most film buffs hold Alfred the Great, I must confess dissent. To be sure, he is a clever and skilled craftsman, with some fine films under his expansive belt; but he's strictly a genre director, limited to thrillers of intrigue and murder.

At his best, you appreciate how ingeniously he frightens you; at his worst (all his post-"Psycho" movies), you realize that a truly small talent his is. It seems to me his style hasn't so much developed over the years as stagnated (which may account for its consistency) and the "philosophy" is less implied by him than inferred by the French.

Still, they preserve the cult, and Truffaut is now evidently the high priest. His recently published book on the Hitchcock oeuvre is less an informative critical study than a fatuous panegyric of childish hero-worship. Unsatisfied with a written tribute, however, Truffaut made a movie-tribute in the form of a stupid illogical murder story called "The Bride Wore Black," in which he set out to imitate the old man's style. The key word is "imitate."

"Jules and Jim" was a triumph in its own right and a tribute only in passing, a debt for inspiration acknowledged with a charming mixture of reverie and love for the work of two great artists. But "The Bride Wore Black" is nothing more or less than a demonstration that Truffaut can make movies just like Hitchcock's. The studio environment of "Fahrenheit 451" was, it appears in retrospect, a preparatory exercise for the later perfectly successful experiment in assimilation. The price of this pointless success—for Truffaut and for us—is the ruination of the most promising directorial talent to enter movies since Kurosawa.

"Stolen Kisses" returns to Antoine Doinel, whom we met as a friendless runaway of 12 in Truffaut's frankly autobiographical first film, "The 400 Blows"; saw again as a teen-ager hopelessly in love in "Love at Twenty"; and now find a young adult still in love with the same girl, Jean-Pierre Leaud, who has grown up with the role, is again Antoine.

Some of us hoped that with a return to material that was, at least, close to him, Truffaut might also return to his early style. But it appears the Hitchcock hang-up has inflicted irreparable damage. Aside from a pathetic glimmer or two of the old inspiration, the style here is vapid and vacillating.

The great beauty of Truffaut's early style was its effortless versatility; it seemed to spring with such spontaneous "rightness" from the material that he could glide through an endlessly shifting kaleidoscope of moods and tones and points of view, travelling from mirth to melancholy, realism to romanticism, drama to lyricism, as smoothly and naturally as the spectrum of colors swirling about a rotating prism. Of course this effortlessness is an illusion; it is usually achieved only through the most vigorous discipline, the intensest poetic distillation.

But in "Stolen Kisses" about all you feel is the grinding, plodding, pedestrian straining for effect. Like Hitchcock, Truffaut now seems satisfied with mere approximation in place of precision.

Take, for instance, the mysterious man who follows Christine. One of Truffaut's most effective early techniques was to introduce momentarily and then drop seemingly irrelevant characters. But they only seemed irrelevant; what they did was give his stories texture and resonance, as if they simply emerged from an on-going life around them. But here the mysterious man is either too absurd or not absurd enough to convince us; he looks and sounds played for effect (which of course he is, only we shouldn't feel that way about it).

Truffaut has even abandoned basic competence: he permits faulty lighting by his photographer and sloppy cutting by his editor. But the material itself deserves no better. It isn't really a bad story, it's just that its so slight and insubstantial that it evaporates when the lights go on. You've nothing to take with you, to cling to.

In fact the only residue "Stolen Kisses" leaves is depression. And it is depressing!—to watch the director with the most abundant lyric gift since the great Jean Renoir resorting to such cheesy tricks as depicting a homosexual's anxiety with close-ups of wringing hands, or falling back on such trite plot-machinations as having just the right person overhear just the right conversation at just the right time.

As a final irony it's probably worth noting that Truffaut's next movie is... a murder mystery or crime yarn or some such set in Mississippi or Missouri. In other words more, to use Stanley Kaufmann's apt phrase, "Hitchcock-and-bull."

Letter To the Editor

Urges USG To Look at Self

TO THE EDITOR: At this precise moment, I am sitting on USG Congress listening to Ted Itzkowitz read names from the student directory. His intention is to ask the Congress to seat all of these students on Congress. This sounds ridiculous. This entire, immature action was caused by the request that Joe Myers, certified Town Congressman, be placed on the roll and given the privilege of voting.

Perhaps you are aware that the USG Supreme Court removed the certification of Mr. Myers because he accepted a bid to a fraternity. Thus, according to the Supreme Court, Mr. Myers cannot sit as a congressman. The body of Congress questions the validity of this ruling and the chair does not recognize this sentiment of the Congress.

This immature, stupid action has been going on for the past three years while I have been sitting on Congress. We, as students, are currently seeking representation and voting rights in the Faculty Senate. As long as we continue to demonstrate this type of childish action, we should be denied recognition as adults and educated people capable of making decisions such as come before the Faculty Senate.

I would suggest that USG stop and take a long, hard look at itself. If we want to be respected as being capable of serving in capacities that require mature action, we must grow up and act in a manner so that members of the University Community can respect us.

This is mandatory and I strongly urge members of Congress, as well as the executive, to attempt this action!

Harriers, Booters In Rough Contests

The freshman football game highlights today's sporting events but three other sports will attempt to take advantage of the off week in varsity football to gather their share of attention. The cross country and soccer teams are at home and members of the varsity field hockey team will be trying out for a place on the district squad.

Cross Country Battle
The harriers face a formidable challenge in Pitt, a weak team on the gridiron, but a power in cross country. At 2 p.m. the Panthers, unbeaten in six starts, will run against the Lions, a team trying to stay on the win side of the season ledger. State is 3-2, but both losses came to schools rank annually at the top of national cross country — Villanova and Georgetown.

Underclassmen will dominate the event, with sophomores Greg Friedrichs and Jerry Henderson the leading State runners and junior Jerry Richey the fastest Panther. State coach Harry Groves has indicated that he also plans to use some freshmen in the meet, although freshmen are not eligible against most opponents. Pitt is one of the Eastern Collegiate Athletic Conference teams which uses freshmen in cross country.

Booters Underdogs vs. Owls
The soccer team will face a troublesome opponent for the third straight week. The booters have been shut out on consecutive Saturdays by nationally ranked Navy and defending NCAA champion Maryland. Today at 2 p.m. they will attempt to rebound against Temple — a team State hasn't beaten for three seasons. This could be the year, though, as the Owls are weaker than usual, with a 3-6-1 record.

The soccer team suffers from a definite lack of punch, having hit the nets only five times in seven games. That meager output is responsible for State's 2-5 record. But the Lions have hope — they tied Temple last year when the Owls were one of the best teams in the East.

Seven women's field hockey teams will play a tournament today and tomorrow on the Women's Athletic Fields to determine district representatives for a national tourney. Those players selected in the national tourney will go into international competition. No Penn State coach has ever advanced.

Goes to Cleveland

Cards Ship Pinson

ST. LOUIS (AP) — The St. Louis Cardinals, still cleaning house after a disappointing fourth place finish, have traded Vada Pinson to Cleveland for Jose Cardenal, the St. Louis Post-Dispatch said yesterday.

The newspaper said the trade would be announced when the interleague trading period begins Nov. 20.

The Cardinals front office had no comment on the report. Pinson, acquired from Cincinnati for Bobby Toland and Wayne Granger after the 1968 season, is 31 years old and batted .255 with the Cardinals. Cardenal, 26, with a strong arm and great speed hit .257 for the Indians last season.

The Cardinals already have made several trades since the end of the season, breaking up the team that won two consecutive National League pennants before collapsing last season.

THAT'S WHAT you'll miss today, sports fans, as the Penn State varsity footballers take the week off. That means that Joyce Ritter won't be around to provide entertainment along the sidelines when the action on the field bogs down.

Irish 'Favored' Over Pitt

PITTSBURGH (AP) — The Pitt Panthers, already having achieved the improbable by upsetting Syracuse, attempt the near impossible today when they meet eighth-ranked Notre Dame.

The Irish have rolled over five teams to date, scoring 35 or more points in each victory. Notre Dame has a 5-1-1 record. Still, Notre Dame Coach Ara Parseghian, expressed a note of caution about Pitt, which already this season has matched its total victories in the past three years.

NBA Set To Expand Next Season

NEW YORK (AP) — The National Basketball Association will expand to 16 teams next year with the addition of two franchises, Commissioner Walter Kennedy said yesterday. Kennedy called a meeting of his expansion committee for Dec. 8 at which final plans will be made before the owners decide on the two cities. The site of the meeting is expected to be Chicago. The new franchises are expected to be named before Jan. 20.

"We have firm commitments for franchises from at least one group in six different cities," Kennedy said.

The interested groups include Portland, Ore.; Cleveland; Buffalo, N.Y.; Memphis, Tenn.; Kansas City, and Minneapolis.

Battle Indians Today

Frosh Face First Home Game

By DAN DONOVAN
Assistant Sports Editor
Many people think that walking through the gates at Beaver Stadium today will be like passing through the time barrier into the future of Penn State football. The Lion freshmen play Indiana U. (Pa.) today at 1:30 p.m. and lots of people will be trying to pick the stars of the future. If the Lion first-year men play well, talk of a dynasty will start. If not, the futures of Penn State football will seem all downhill. Unfortunately, time machines and time warps only exist on Star Trek. There will be no way to truly gauge the future Nittany Lion squads by the performance today. A win won't mean potential greatness; a loss won't mean total disaster.

Out of Positions
Frosh coach Earl Bruce will not be able to show the full talents of his players. He has only 27 freshmen to work with and it's hard to fill all his positions with the right persons. Linebackers may be playing guard and fullbacks may be playing tight end. Although the freshmen have lots of individual talent they may not be impressive today because they lack the depth and the specialization of the varsity.

The freshmen are recruited to fill the varsity spots which will be depleted by graduation. Hence if a couple of tackles are due to graduate, the coaching staff will probably try to recruit six or seven to take their place.

This year, noting the blue chip future of Lydell Mitchell, Gary Deuel, Francis Harris, Charlie Wilson and other Lion backs, Penn State went after some big, burly men to replace the offensive and defensive linemen who will soon depart.

Linemen Aplenty
The little Lion roster abounds with players who are listed as tackles and ends and it is evident that the Penn State pass rush of the future is expected to come from them.

The State recruiting policy has been shifted to encompass all of the eastern states. Joe Yukica, Boston College coach, claims that Penn State is everywhere but tries to recruit. "It seems like wherever I go," Yukica said of his recruiting, "Penn State was there the day before."

Besides the basic corps of Pennsylvania athletes the Lions recruit, other states are scoured for prospects. On this year's frosh squad, five come from New Jersey, three from New York, one from Maryland and another from Delaware.

Wherever they come from, it will have little bearing on today's game. It will not be a perfect way to slide into Penn State's football future, but everyone will be watching closely anyway.

Indiana Blacks Still off Squad; Hoosiers in Running for Roses

By The Associated Press
The Indiana football boycott is apparently cleared up, but the Hoosiers' hopes for a Rose Bowl trip still remain clouded as the Big 10 race heads into the final stages.

John Pont, head coach at Indiana, dropped 10 black players from the squad Thursday after they had boycotted practice on the two previous days.

Pont said he considered the boys' complaints to be personal and not of a racial nature. The players had no comment on their dismissal from the squad when they were told of Pont's rule-two missed practices without a valid excuse and dismissal from the team.

The effect of the player losses will be seen today when Iowa meets the Hoosiers at Bloomington.

With only three weeks left in the Big 10 race, Indiana, Michigan and Purdue all have a shot at the trip to Pasadena and the Rose Bowl. Each team has a 3-1 league mark with three games left and each is expected to win today.

Michigan, ranked 18th, is a 21-point choice over winless Illinois while Purdue, No. 10, is a two-touchdown favorite over Michigan State. Indiana is an eight-point choice.

The title could go down to the last weekend when Purdue meets the Hoosiers. In between both the Boiler-makers and Michigan play top-ranked Ohio State. Indiana drew a bye this season against the Buckeyes, who are not eligible for the Rose Bowl as they made the trip last year.

In other top games, Wisconsin travels to Ohio State. Baylor is at No. 2 Texas. South Carolina is at No. 3 Tennessee. Arkansas No. 4, is at Rice. Washington State at No. 6 Southern California. No. 8 Notre Dame at Pittsburgh and Oklahoma at No. 9 Missouri.

Rockets: No Trade For Angry Hayes

SAN DIEGO (AP) — Elvin Hayes, says the president of the San Diego Rockets, "will be playing here a long time" despite the Big E's threat to leave.

After a disastrous road trip Hayes told newsmen: "Everything I do is wrong—if they don't like the job I'm doing and they want other players, they can trade me."

"I don't want to shoulder the blame for our bad record personally," he told general manager Pete Newell when the Rockets returned Thursday night after losing five straight on the road.

Bob Breitbard, president of the National Basketball Association club, said yesterday that Hayes won't leave. "Others may go but not Elvin," he said.
