

Student Senator Hassle

AFTER LAST NIGHT'S Senate Committee meeting, student senate seats are once again in the news. It seems that a majority of University senators might not be far from approving the recommended 36 University Park undergraduate seats, so it is unfortunate that debate is continuing among students as to how to choose the student senators.

The plan forwarded by the Undergraduate Student Government calls for 25 of these to be elected "through the offices of USG." One senator from each college adds 10 more seats and an ex officio post for the USG president rounds out the 36.

The bulk of these, chosen through USG machinery, would be elected as residence hall representatives, in much the same way USG congressmen themselves are chosen. Unfortunately, this means that the problem of elected persons moving from area to area, or downtown, has not been solved.

APPARENTLY, USG does not learn from its mistakes.

Because although one congressman was already unseated this year for moving out of his residence hall area, they now intend to stick this faulty policy on their senate election machinery.

A more reasonable method would call for the student senators to be elected primarily as college representatives, through the already set up college councils. Because students are for the most part highly transient in residence during their University careers, it is unreasonable for that to be the primary criterion for choosing representatives to student groups for the University Senate.

ON THE OTHER HAND, while some students do make transfers from major to major, and less frequently, from college to college, academic affiliations are generally more permanent.

Therefore, it makes sense to draw the majority of student senators from college rather than residence hall affiliation.

THE SENATE COMMITTEE on Committees and Rules made a recommendation saying that the colleges should provide "at least one senator." So there is room for interpreting this into expanded recognition of the colleges as units within the University.

Development at Historical Pace

By JOHN P. MCKELVEY
Professor of Physics

It has not been my habit until this time to engage in the debates which have raged in the public prints about student radicalism and unrest in general, and the specific problems involving black students in particular. But after reading Mr. Donn F. Bailey's diatribe in The Collegian on Tuesday, Nov. 18, entitled "Tip of the Reluctant Faculty Iceberg", in which Professor Ernest C. Pollard's ideas regarding certain problems and concerns shared by students and blacks are criticized angrily and sarcastically, I feel that a few words in Dr. Pollard's defense are in order.

As I understand it, what Professor Pollard meant to say was that this university, like most others, is deeply sympathetic with the aspirations of black students and disadvantaged students in general, but that its rate of progress in providing ways of satisfying these aspirations is limited because its budget is rigidly structured and the money it receives is almost invariably earmarked for a particular purpose by the agency whence the funds are obtained. The amount of resources it may legally allocate to these causes, however worthy, is therefore limited. There is no question of allotting money now being used for research on growing mushrooms to programs for disadvantaged students; if this is done, then next year there will be no money appropriated for mushroom research, and none either for disadvantaged students. The University's rate of progress in this direction, however rapidly it wants to proceed, is therefore limited by the amount of money it receives in direct support of this particular cause. Aside from the amount contributed by concerned students and other sympathetic individuals (which, by the way, is pitifully small), this money must come from state and federal sources. In other words, it must come from the society outside the University, a society which at the moment is much less sympathetic to these goals than the university community. The battle with the university is won, and the real struggle must take place in society at large, where representatives are elected and where political muscle, properly manipulated, can bring about the funds appropriations which are needed.

I believe that this assessment of the situation is perfectly correct, and the sooner it is assimilated by the extremist fringes of students and faculty members, the sooner practical progress will be made in regard to providing better educational opportunities for black students and other young persons to whom these opportunities are now denied.

Mr. Bailey's attack upon Dr. Pollard, which really neglects the important substantive issues which are raised, and which focuses upon Professor Pollard's "arrogant stance", "social condescension" and attitude of "cultural superiority", is by and large a personal assault on what Mr. Bailey chooses to regard as Dr. Pollard's characteristically white way of viewing negro problems. This is, however, in itself a form of bigotry; is Mr. Bailey to be permitted the privilege of discussing the problem from a characteristically black point of view, while denying Dr. Pollard the opportunity of operating from the frame of reference of a white person? We are all trapped within our own reference systems, and our way of viewing the situations we are exposed to develops historically, and often not by our own choice. Mr. Bailey complains that Dr. Pollard's view of the taxpayer is that of a white taxpayer. While it is true, of course, that lots of taxes are paid by black citizens, the fact must be faced that most of the taxes assessed in this state, and the nation as a whole, are paid by white persons, and often by white people who are not particularly sympathetic to the educational and political aspirations of blacks. It is clear that progress along the lines desired by the university community as a whole (including, I hope, Mr. Bailey) will never be accomplished without the acquiescence, if not the approval, of the white majority. The violent tone which Mr. Bailey adopts is calculated to produce negative rather than positive progress in this direction. I am aware that this argument will offend Mr. Bailey, because it ignores the question of just why the black segment of society has to have the approval of the white segment to get what it deserves anyway. The fact is, however, that progress on behalf of any minority group cannot be made without at least the acquiescence of the white colonial point of view which offends Mr. Bailey's easily aroused sensibilities, it is nevertheless one which blacks will have to accept and live with even though they may not agree.

What really frightens me in Mr. Bailey's rejoinder to Dr. Pollard is the immediate assumption of malice and ill intent which is made. If ever human beings are to live with each other on a day-to-day basis in reasonable peace, freedom and harmony, there must somehow exist in everyone's mind an initial assumption of innocence, at least of innocent intent. Imagine, for instance, living in a society where everyone who passes on the street must be regarded as a criminal, a possible assailant, an enemy, and where any routine transaction must be viewed, in the absence of positive proof to the contrary, as fraudulent! It seems to me that Mr. Bailey prefers to think that he inhabits such a world. I don't believe this community is like that, though it is tending in that direction, thanks to you, Mr. Bailey. In any case, I know with certainty that Dr. Pollard's intent isn't to be regarded that way. There is no person in the University who has contributed more unsparringly and unstintingly of his own time, money, and personal and professional resources for the benefit and advancement of disadvantaged students of the state and the nation.

When I try to arrive at an agreement with other individuals or groups on a set of principles and a plan of action, I don't usually find it very profitable to insist not only that they agree with me, but that they agree with me for what I consider to be the right reasons. Reasons and attitudes develop only very slowly, at a historical pace, the pace at which one generation is replaced by another. Besides, Mr. Bailey, who can say, in the final analysis, that my reasons are nobler than yours, or that yours are nobler than Dr. Pollard's?

Michigan Puts Rose Bowl Hopes on Line

Win or lose, Michigan is expected to be handed a bouquet of roses today, but Southern California and UCLA will have to cut their own if they want to meet the Wolverines in the Rose Bowl.

Michigan, ranked 12th, stands a 15-point underdog to top-ranked and unbeaten Ohio State, but the Wolverines are expected to be named as the Big 10's bowl representative even in defeat. That's because Ohio State can't return under league rules and Purdue lost earlier in Michigan and went to the bowl more recently.

USC-UCLA
Southern Cal. No. 5, and UCLA, No. 6, however, won't have any Pacific-8 rule like that going for them when they clash at Los Angeles on national television in a winner-take-all revival of their cross-town rivalry. The conference title and the bowl bid are at stake.

Only a handful of other ranked or bowl-bound teams are in action with a few other titles on the line.

Unbeaten Penn State, No. 4, and Missouri, No. 7, bound for a meeting in the Orange Bowl, are heavily favored against Pittsburgh and Kansas, respectively. But Missouri, 8-1, needs the victory against bitter rival Kansas, 1-8, to wrap up at least a share of the Big Eight title.

Huskies—Sooners
Nebraska, tied with Missouri at 5-1 in the conference and headed for a Sun Bowl meeting against Georgia play at Oklahoma.

Notre Dame, No. 8 and going to the Cotton Bowl against either Texas, No. 2, or Arkansas, No. 3, both of whom are idle, closes against Air Force.

Tennessee, No. 9, and going to the Gator Bowl, is a big favorite against Kentucky, and 10th-ranked Louisiana State is the choice against Tulane tonight.

Stanford, No. 14, meets California; Purdue, No. 17, tries to keep alive its slim bowl hopes against Indiana; West Virginia, No. 18, opposes Syracuse; Houston, No. 19, plays Wyoming at night, and Toledo, No. 20, takes on Xavier.

Colorado and Kansas State butt heads for a bid to the Liberty Bowl and Princeton and Dartmouth collide for the Ivy League title.

East Counselors Down West

Resident Assistants of East Towers edged West Halls, 3-0, last week to cop the intramural R.A. league football championship. The victory marked a comeback for the Towers men, who had been defeated by West during a previous encounter.

The only score in the contest came when Bob Zoelle kicked a 35 yard field goal early in the second half. The field goal was set up in the previous play by a 40 yard pass from Walt Anderson to Zoelle. The score marked Zoelle's third field goal attempt of the game.

Six pass interceptions by the Towers stymied the West Halls offense, which was held to two first downs. Both teams had held 3-1 records before the playoff.

Improved Pitt Calls in Saints To Hold Off Lion Shock Troops

By DON McKEE
Collegian Sports Editor

The fans out in Missouri will all have their radios tuned to the Eastern football scores today, just for a change. No, none of the midwesterners are interested in the Pitt-Penn State game. They'll be trying to soak up a little long distance culture from the Harvard-Yale clash before meeting the Nittany Lions in the Orange Bowl.

Out in the plains territory, where Spiro Agnew is the biggest hero since the inventor of the prairie plow, the fans think that Easterners play football so timid that no one needs a helmet. And if Pitt gives State a hard time today, everyone west of the Monongahela will say that he had told you so.

Swept Past Academies

The thing that everyone forgets is that Pitt is a vastly improved team this year, having won the breath-taking total of four games and barely dropping another to Tulane. Not only that, the Panthers have beaten three of their four big Eastern opponents—Army, Navy and Syracuse—and can make it a clean sweep by taking State today. No one's pulled off that feat since... well, since Penn State did it a year ago.

That's indicative of the way the publicity for this game is getting out of hand. People think the Panthers will catch the Lions looking forward to Missouri and a good many of those corn belt radio listeners hope so, too. It could happen with the new life that Carl DePasqua has injected into Pitt football—but it's not likely.

Another Oklahoma

A State victory will be the 28th straight non-losing effort by Joe Paterno's charges, longest since Oklahoma went 48 games without losing back in the Bud Wilkinson 50's.

As usual, the defense will be the Nittany Lions' biggest gun, although the offense hasn't done too badly against Pitt in recent years, either, scoring 65 points last year with everyone playing but Jon Fox. But it's still the defense that does the early job for State. Since the so-called "Rover Boys" have turned in two shutouts this year, things don't look too promising for Jim Friedl and his fleet of swift receivers.

In eight games this season, State's defense has been responsible for 85 points by causing 29 turnovers—18 pass interceptions, eight fumble recoveries and three blocked punts. In the last two seasons, the defense has gotten State the unreal total of 230 points. If the first unit played out the games, they'd have enough scoring potential to allow the offense the day off.

Keeping the first string defense in longer than usual may have some value today. If State can hold its last two opponents under 30 points (total) it can break a record of fewest points allowed in a 10 game season. The 1959 team that had Bob Minter, Glenn Ressler and Dave Robinson—each an All-American at one time or another—allowed 102 points.

Calls for Air Cover

The threat of State's defensive machine is so overwhelming that DePasqua is making jokes about it, even going so far as to enlist the help of his patron saint, St. Thaddeus Jude.

"I've been talking to him," DePasqua said. "He's supposed to come to the aid of those in desperate need of help."

But, as Ara Parseghian could tell DePasqua, that sort of outside help rarely works in this secular age. And Joe Paterno has had exclusive rights to divine guidance in the last two years, anyway.
